MACDONALD DECIDES ON APPEAL TO ELECTORATE

Labor Government To Resign If Vote Of Censure Wins

PARTY CONFERS

Month's Reprieve Is Seen In Liberal Amendment

(Reuter's Service)
London, Oct. 3.—An earnest discussion took place between Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and his colleagues late last night which, it is reliably reported, resulted in a decision to go to the country if the motion of censure in connection with the withdrawal of the prosecution against Mr. Campbell of the Worker's Weekly is carried on October 8, after assuring passage of the Irish Bill; but Sir John Simon's amendment has given the Government at least a month's reprieve in the opinion of lobby correspondents, who point out that the purpose of the amendment is to avoid the Liberals sharing with the Conservatives the responsibility for turning out the Government on an issue which the Liberals regard with greater disfavor than the Russian Treaty.

ZAGHLUL PASHA ENDS SESSIONS WITH MACDONALD

Decision Of Egyptian Premier To Return To Cairo Is Announced

(Reuter's Service)
London, Oct. 3.—The conversations between Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and Zaghul Pasha, the Egyptian Premier, have concluded. Zaghul Pasha will depart for home shortly.

The early conclusion of the negotiations, coupled with Zaghul Pasha's intention to depart a week earlier than was originally anticipated, has created an impression that the conference did not advance beyond the stage of generalities. Both sides are most reticent and decline to state whether the cryptic official announcement of the conclusion of the conference implied a rupture but it is understood that Zaghul Pasha's silence is partly due to the uncertainty of the British political situation.

Suicide Verdict In Rowett Inquest

London, Oct. 3.—The verdict at the inquest on Mr. J. Q. Rowett, who was found hanged in his residence, was one of suicide.

Kiangsu Soldiery Levies Heavily On Huchow Folk

(China Press Correspondence)
Huchow, Chekiang, Sept. 30.—Huchow is again laboring under considerable excitement due to rumors that there has been fighting at Kashing between the forces of General Lu Yung-hsiang and some of the Kiangsu and Anhwei troops who have just passed through here, and that the Anhwei troops have been driven back. Should they retreat and leave the field of battle entirely, it is believed they will come to Huchow again and loot it even worse than the Chekiang troops did some ten days ago. During the last few days, it is reported that more than thirty thousand soldiers belonging to Kiangsu and Anhwei, mostly the latter, have passed through Huchow enroute to Kashing. Practically all these soldiers travelled by foot as there are no boats in this part of the country. All boats and launches have been taken by the troops of General Chen Yao-san in his recent change of positions from west of Taihu Lake to the Shanghai sector. These soldiers arriving in Huchow by foot, from long distances were tired, and hungry, and ready to make trouble if their every wish and desire were not satisfied.

The Chamber of Commerce was informed by wire of their coming, and had to send out a delegation to meet them. This means that quarters had to be provided for them while in Huchow, much food had to be prepared, and in many cases money was wanted. Not just one group had to be met, but every group, and provisions had to be made for them. One small troop of cavalry from Soochow numbering less than two hundred men, was not properly welcomed and provided for, due to a lack of knowledge of their coming, and they became quite indignant. They rode directly to the Chamber of Commerce and the leader banged the table with his fist and demanded an explanation of the chairman as to why they were not properly received. Of course,

KING HUSSEIN ABDICATES IN MOSLEM FIGHT

Ruler Of Hedjaz Gives Up Throne Following Appeal

(Reuter's Service)
London, Oct. 3.—King Hussein of Hedjaz has abdicated.

(Reuter's Service)
London, Oct. 3.—The news of King Hussein's abdication was preceded by a message from Reuter's correspondent at Jeddah stating that a committee of the leading inhabitants of Jeddah and Mecca had demanded dissolution of the Hashemite Government headed by King Hussein and the succession of a temporary Government for the protection of the country appointed by the people of Hedjaz, who were ready to conform with the orders of the whole Moslem world. They declared that they did not wish to fight anyone and appealed to the world to stop the present hostilities.

LEADERS OF CHIHILI ARMY NEAR JEHO ARE DEPOSED

Deprived Of Office By Peking Mandate

CHIHILI RETREATS

Capture Of Chihfeng Is Reported In Mukden

(Eastern News Agency)

Peking, Oct. 4.—A Presidential mandate dated October 3 deprives Liu Fu-yu, Tupan of Military Affairs of Jehol and concurrently commander of the 26th Brigade attached to the 13th Chihli Division and commander-in-chief of the troops at the front of the Second Chihli Army, of all his offices and also deprives Chung Han-chih, Pacification Commissioner of Chaoyang and concurrently Vice-Commissioner of the troops at the front of the Second Chihli Army, of his posts.

The reason for the above deprivation is unknown as yet but the step taken by the Government is quite noteworthy in view of the situation that has been created of late in the district of Chaoyang and Jehol.

(Eastern News Agency)

Peking, Oct. 3.—As previously reported, General Wang Chang-pin, accompanied by more than 20 staff officers and adjutants as well as by upward of 100 bodyguards, left here this morning at 7.40 o'clock for Jehol in 30 motor-cars. Marshal Wu Pei-fu had General Hsieh Ching-yun, Commander-in-Chief of Gendarmerie, accompany General Wang Chang-pin in order to console the troops at the front. It is reported that the main object of General Wang's visit to Jehol is either to inspect the front-line or to take command of both the Second and Third Chihli Armies.

(Eastern News Agency)

Tientsin, Oct. 3.—It is reliably reported that the 23rd, 9th, 13th Divisions and 4th Mixed Brigade of the Chihli troops have been concentrated in the sector of Hsienfeng and that heavy fighting is expected momentarily there.

(Eastern News Agency)

Tientsin, Oct. 3.—The Tangtao Steam Navigation Company has been ordered by the Peking Government to charter three steamers and to get them ready so that they may be used at any moment for the transportation of troops. In this connection, it is inferred that the Peking authorities intend to transport the Chihli troops, perhaps, the 26th Division, to Newchwang by these steamers.

SOVIET TO RAISE FLAG TODAY AT CONSULATE HERE

Local Ceremonies To Coincide With Similar Rites in Peking

The Red Flag of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics will be raised over the former Czarist Consulate, No. 1 Whangpoo Road, at ceremonies which are to take place at noon today.

The Municipal Band has been engaged to render appropriate music for the occasion.

The flag-raising at the Soviet Consulate-General here coincides with that at the Soviet Embassy in Peking where similar ceremonies will be held at noon.

(Eastern News Agency)

Peking, Oct. 3.—The Soviet Embassy, which has established itself in the former Russian Legation, has decided to perform on Sunday next at 11.30 a.m. the ceremony of hoisting the Soviet flag over the Embassy building. A large number of invitations have been issued.

Watchful Waiting

ZANNI IS HALTED BY BAD WEATHER; TO LEAVE TODAY

Argentinian Aviator To Try To Get Off For Japan This Morning

Yesterday's bad weather forced Major Pedro L. Zanni, Argentinian aviator to postpone his scheduled flight from Shanghai to Kagoshima, Japan, the next leg in his attempt to encircle the globe by air. Weather permitting, Major Zanni will leave Black Point, where his plane, the Provincia de Buenos Aires, is moored, this morning with Kagoshima as his objective.

A personal inspection of his plane convinced Major Zanni that everything was in readiness. Necessary repairs were completed late Friday by Signor Felipe C. Beltrame, Major Zanni's mechanic, and it was hoped that the flight might be resumed yesterday morning. With incessant rain yesterday morning, however, any attempt at flight was impossible, and, regretfully, because he is anxious to proceed with as little delay as possible, Major Zanni was forced to call off the attempt for the day.

If weather conditions are favorable this morning, Major Zanni and Signor Beltrame, accompanied by the official party, will leave the Customs jetty at 6.30 o'clock this morning for Black Point. This would fix the time of departure from Black Point at about 8 o'clock.

Major Zanni spent the greater part of yesterday resting in his rooms at the Astor House.

GREAT DAMAGE RESULTS FROM RAINS IN INDIA

Railway Traffic Dislocated; Many Passengers Are Left Stranded

(Reuter's Service)

Simla, Oct. 3.—The rains have now ceased. The damage to villages and crops is enormous. Hundreds of railway passengers are stranded. Communication has been severed between Simla and Mussoorie and in the Dun Valley. Railway traffic is dislocated on the Oudh Rohilkhand, North Western and Simla-Kalka Railways while all the hill roads in the vicinity of Simla, Mussoorie and Mainital are blocked.

Kiangsu Offensive, Long Imminent Near Huangtu, Is Slowed Up By Rains

Local Attack At Fangtai Village, But Apparently Elements Squelch Plans For General Drive; Considerable Activity Reported At Sungkiang

BY TALBOT PATRICK

Nansiang, Oct. 4.—The recent rain seems to have slowed up and then stopped a heavy Kiangsu offensive which had been impending in this sector and which made a false start last night by a local attack in the vicinity of Fangtai village a couple of miles northwest of Huangtu station.

Acquaintances from Sungkiang whom I saw in Shanghai just before leaving for Nansiang reported that the Fukien troops made another attempt to cross bridge 31 and suffered many casualties from machine gun fire. They reported firing all night and through the early morning from the bridge down to and for a short distance along the main body of the Whangpoo.

The Sungkiang reports were that there was no fighting in the sector immediately north of the railway line, but statements in this section indicate that there was heavy firing during the night somewhere in the vicinity of or this side of Chingpu. A south wind was blowing through the night, so that the sound of rifle, machine and field gun fire was clearly heard, although it was known to be farther away than Huangtu village on Soochow Creek.

DAMP MARTIAL ARDOR

Meanwhile the heavy Kiangsu offensive is expected here as soon as the weather dries off. Ten thousand troops are reported massed for a major attack on a narrow sector north of the railway line and it is declared that field guns to support the advance by a Chinese barrage have been drawn even from Liuhoo.

An unusually accurate source of information states that since I was last in this sector 4,500 Kiangsu troops, Shanling men like the majority of those they are fighting, offered to change arm bands and become active members of the Chekiang army. The offer was made by emissaries chosen from the three regiments concerned.

My informant stated that the offer was flatly refused, although he could or would not give me the cause of the refusal. It is possible, however, that the Chekiang generals have a "down" on enlarging their force in this way, as a number of spies are declared to have come across with previous smaller groups of would-be recruits and to have caused a great deal of trouble behind the lines.

MAJOR ACTION DEVELOPS IN SUNGKIANG; FIGHTING ELSEWHERE IS SPORADIC

Casualties Run To Four Figures On Both Sides In Two-Day Engagement In Western Theater; Chekiang Line Stretches Into Sea To Cut Off Overland Penetration; Chinese Bankers Warned Not To Support Peking

A major operation, which outranks all the fighting yet stated in the Kiangsu-Chekiang war, is being developed on the Sungkiang front. While all the other sectors saw but sporadic action, firing in this region increased in intensity yesterday, both sides massing heavy forces to solidify their battle lines.

More than 10,000 Fukien and Kiangsu troops are concentrated at Shihhutang and the villages known as Kingshan, Chongyuan, Sungy'n and Tanlanmiao, located in the south of Sungkiang and on the opposite side of the Whangpoo. The Chekiang forces, 7,000 strong, are distributed in Sungkiang, Minghong and Tatsangking, which later town forms the check to prevent the invaders from crossing the Huangpu River.

The heavy artillery and machine gun fire yesterday and Friday was staged at Bridge number 31 and Chuching, both of which were heavily mined. Casualties on both sides ran into four figures for the two days of combat. Yesterday morning, fighting spread to a town named Miehitsu, about four li south of Sungkiang. As a result, the Chekiang battle line was extended from Sungkiang to the sea at Kingshanwei in order to stop any possible overland penetration.

On the Kiating-Liuhoo sectors, the tranquility remains unbroken. Only in Huangtu at dawn yesterday, a handful of "dare-death" Kiangsu men assaulted with hand grenades. They were repelled, according to Lunghua headquarters, more than a dozen of them being taken prisoners.

The Kiangsu headquarters has admitted its removal from Quinsai to Soochow, according to the Kio Wen News Agency. The reason given out by the headquarters, the agency said, was to enable the Kiangsu commander-in-chief to have better control over the battle line between Sungkiang, Huangtu, Kiating and Liuhoo, because the former headquarters was inclined to be more attentive to the needs of Huangtu and Kiating on account of geographical reasons.

MUTINY REPORT
The special correspondent for the same agency confirms the report of the mutiny of the 74th regiment of Yang Chun-pu's 19th division at Pingwan, the execution of the captain, Chow Yung-hui and the final dispersing of the stragglers in the neighborhood of Wushih.

Today being the first anniversary of the election of Tsao Kun as president, the Kiangsu branch of the Kuomintang Party will circulate the country with the following manifesto:

"The election of the 'traitor' Tsao Kun through bribery was illegal and detrimental to the nation. The present war was caused by this act of treason. On the occasion of the first anniversary of this humiliation, we trust that the people of the Republic will rise to the call of suppressing this arch-criminal and vindicate ourselves as a people worthy of our civilisation."

General Pan Kuo-kan, commander of the first division of Chekiang troops who had withdrawn from the Fukien border to Ningpo, held many interviews with Chekiang leaders yesterday. Among the guests he received at his quarters yesterday were Ex-Governor Chiang Tseng-kwei, Ex-Governor Chu Yin-kuang, Speaker Chu Fu-cheng of Chekiang and Mr. Ching Ping-ling, the revolutionary leader.

Under date of Oct. 3, Generals Chang Tso-li and Lu Yung-hsiang issued a joint manifesto addressed to the Chinese bankers, urging them not to lend any money to Tsao Kun and Wu Pei-fu and saying that loans contracted by them with the Peking Government after the outbreak of the war on September 3 would not be recognised by them.

ROAD REPAIRS

General Ho Feng-lin yesterday ordered Hsu Chien-chin, director of the North Shanghai Public Works to repair immediately the Woosung Military Road and the Liuhoo Road as a result of the heavy rain during the last few days.

On behalf of the Chekiang military authorities, the Nantao Constabulary yesterday purchased a large number of bamboo poles from firms in Nantao and shipped them to the Sungkiang front. These are to be used for the construction of rafts to cross creeks.

The Sin Wan Pao confirms the report of mutinies among the Kiangsu troops in Liyang three days ago. Two battalions belonging to General Yang Chang-pa's 19th division revolted at Liyang.

Force Of Numbers Must Win In Long Run On Provincial War, He Says

Just how long it will take this man doesn't know, but of the final result of the war in this section there can be no question, says a high official from the Kiangsu side of the provincial war in the Shanghai area who was in Shanghai yesterday. This man, who desires for obvious reasons, not to have his name used in the inner councils of Kiangsu and within the last ten days has been all over the front lines from Liuhoo to west of Huangtu where the Kiangsu lines cross the upper reaches of the Whangpoo River.

"How can the end be otherwise than a Kiangsu victory," this man asks, "when Kiangsu has a total of 57,000 men on its side and the circle about General Lu is day by day being tightened? When General Lu retired from Hangchow to Shanghai he claimed to have 35,000 men in this area. Certainly this number has been decreased in the recent fighting. Therefore there can be little question of the ultimate victory. The only question is that of time. How long it will require we can't say. We hope it will be short in order so that the suspense—which is getting on everybody's nerves in Shanghai—will be ended, but General Lu has announced his intention to fight to the bitter end. Therefore we have nothing to do but carry on with the encircling movement."

KIANGSU'S FORCES

The disposition of the Kiangsu forces from the standpoint of number is somewhat like this according to the information of our given to a representative of THE CHINA PRESS yesterday afternoon:

Around Liuhoo there are 12,000 troops and 2,000 marines. At Kiating there are 3,000 troops. Between Kiating and Huangtu and including the line driven into Chekiang territory by Gen. Chen Tiao-yuan there are approximately 16,000 troops, including men brought down from Honan and Shantung.

On the west of the railroad between Huangtu and Soochow Creek there are 4,000 troops. General Sun Chuan-fang on the sector at Sungkiang has approximately 8,000 troops, including Fukienese and Chekiang soldiers.

Behind the lines under Bei Pao-san on the upper reaches of the Whangpoo River are approximately 12,000 troops. This briefly is the Kiangsu side of the story and the explanation of this official's optimism regarding the ending of the war in this part of China in a victory for Kiangsu.

As to the fight in the North, our informant is of the opinion that nothing further than skirmishing for position has taken place. He is of opinion that the victories reported for General Chang Tso-li's armies are unimportant and that it may be General Wu's tactics to draw General Chang down into Chihli away from his base of supplies in order that a hard blow may be delivered that will annihilate him in pretty much the same fashion that he was eliminated two years ago.

As to the possibility of bringing about final peace by negotiation, our informant is of the opinion that it is not likely.

and fled in the direction of... and Changchow. The Shanghai-Nanking Railway, consequently was blocked for some time. A encircling movement conducted by the loyal troops was effective and the mutinied forces were disarmed at Taiyang. The American Red Cross will send a delegation this morning to inspect the Emergency Hospitals established by the Chinese Red Cross for the wounded. The representatives will meet officers of the Chinese Red Cross at 26 Kiangling at 9:30 o'clock and the party will then proceed to the 12 hospitals which are taking care of the stricken in Shanghai and vicinity.

TACHANG REFUGEES
Changchow, Sept. 29.—Rev. Warren Stuart and Rev. Walter M. Hearn, working under the American Red Cross in bringing homeless women and children from the war zone reached here Friday night. They met with the leader of the local Chinese Red Cross Saturday morning and asked them to take care of a number of such refugees. They agreed to provide for 200 as the first instalment and Rev. E. L. Sanford and Rev. Hollis Smith left at noon today with a launch to bring the first contingent of refugees from Tachang.

EX-OFFICIALS OF RAIL LINE ARE ARRESTED

Chinese Eastern Taken Over By Chang Tso-lin And Soviet

(Reuter's Pacific Service)
Peking, Oct. 4.—According to a foreign official report four of the directors of the Chinese Eastern Railway, appointed by Marshal Chang Tso-lin, namely, Yuan Ching-kai, Fan Chi-puan, Lu Chin, and Lu Yuan-kuan, arrived in Harbin on October 2, and conferred with the Soviet directors on the following day. As a result of the decision reached at this meeting, M. Ostroloff, the General Manager of the Railway, and M. Gondatti, Chief of the Russian Department, and also one Russian director, were dismissed. The Chinese local authorities subsequently arrested M. Ostroloff and M. Gondatti on charges of alleged embezzlement.

(Reuter's Pacific Service)
Harbin, Oct. 4.—On September 29 the Consular Corps removed the seals from the archives of the Land Department of the Chinese Eastern Railway.

On October 3, a committee composed of Chinese and Soviet officials took over the administration of the Chinese Eastern Railway, dismissing the former administration.

(BY UNITED PRESS)
Peking, Oct. 4.—The foreign legations here are in receipt of a report from Harbin that Marshal Chang Tso-lin has appointed a new board of directors for the Chinese Eastern Railway, acting in conjunction with the Soviet officials, and that the combined board has taken over the management of the railway on Friday. It is reported that one Russian director has been ousted and that the new board has caused the arrest and imprisonment of M. Ostroloff, general manager of the railway, and M. Gondatti, chief of the pensions department, on charges of embezzlement. The French Legation today sent a note of warning to the Manchurian that France's interests in the Chinese Eastern must be protected in spite of the agreement between Moscow and Mukden.

MISS PRISCILLA A. COR

'GYM' CLASSES ARE PLANNED BY FOREIGN Y.W.C.A.

Applications Are Invited For Courses To Be Given In Navy Y

Applications for a proposed gymnastics class and swimming course are being received by the Foreign Young Women's Christian Association Committee, 19 Yuen Ming Road, the suggestion having been made that now that the summer sports are over such courses should find a considerable appeal among foreign young women in Shanghai. Miss Priscilla Cor has consented to act as instructor in both courses, and the equipment of the Navy Y.M.C.A., including the splendid swimming pool will be available.

The "gym" and swimming classes should have a special appeal to calvary fans in Shanghai, for Miss Cor has agreed to supplement the courses with advice and suggestions on how to get fat or thin. All persons interested in getting a figure, or keeping one, should not fail to avail themselves of this unusual opportunity for Miss Cor's suggestions on diet and home exercises are bound to be helpful.

A tentative schedule has been suggested as follows: Gymnasium, Tuesdays at 5:30 p.m., October 14 to December 16, at the Navy Y.M.C.A., ten lessons, cost $2.00. Swimming, Mondays and Thursdays at 5:30 p.m., October 27 to December 18. Navy Y.M.C.A. swimming pool, sixteen swims, cost to association members $8.00, to non-members $10.00.

The definite organization of these classes will depend upon the demands of the navy, especially during the uncertainty of war. It will be necessary for the Navy Y.M.C.A. to reserve the privilege of cancelling any evenings if sailors are in port.

Evenings thus cancelled will be made up to the class. The Foreign Young Women's Christian Association committee is also endeavoring to ascertain if any young women would care to join a French class, and if any are interested in golf instruction, as a teacher can be obtained. Basketball and a hiking club are also proposed for the winter months.

The usual musical teas will be resumed in October, definite announcement regarding them to be made later.

Kiangsu Must Gain Victory Says Official

gottation in this area, the Kiangsu man quoted above, is not so certain. He believes that if the war progresses as it has in the last few weeks and the lines of General Lu are still further pressed toward Shanghai, that the time may be reached when Kiangsu will ask the Consular Body here to mediate and stop any possible further fighting which might endanger the peace of Shanghai. General Chi Hsieh-yuan does not want to disturb the peace and he sees no reason for doing this. To put it another way General Chi does not want to be placed in position where he has to train his guns in the direction of Shanghai. When this time comes, General Chi believes that the Consular Body will then be justified in making a proposal to General Lu to leave peacefully. Complete amnesty will be offered to all of the troops under Generals Lu and Ho in this area, if they will peacefully lay down their arms. There is no animosity against them. They have given a good account of themselves and have shown that they are good fighters. But what is the use of keeping up the bloodshed in this area when the final result is so certain, asked this man again on concluding the interview.

these soldiers during the last few days. Many of the soldiers purchase articles in the stores, pay a part of the price and carry the goods away. To remonstrate with them merely brings curses and abuse from them. If it begins to rain the soldiers "borrow" an umbrella from the first passerby who has one. They go into a home and borrow or insist on the owner giving them anything in sight which they desire. Often they deliberately open trunks, and take out such things as they want.

One officer went to one of the elderly gentry in the city and with a cocked pistol in his hand desired the "loan" of $1,500, which was paid over. A little later another officer also paid the man a like call and succeeded in "borrowing" $1,500 more. Many of the people have been forced to make smaller "loans" to the soldiers.

Shoes and clothing have been taken from the people without the slightest hesitation in large quantities. (Reuter's Service)

St. John's, Newfoundland, Oct. 3.—At the conclusion of the magisterial inquiry into the criminal charges against ex-Premier Squires the magistrate announced that there was sufficient prima facie evidence to justify him committing Sir Richard Squires for trial at the Supreme Court.

Sir Richard Squires reiterated his absolute denial of any complicity in the matter. Not: Sir Richard Squires was arrested last April on a charge of the larceny of $20,000; similar charges were brought against other ex-ministers of Newfoundland.

FORCE IS SENT BY CHEKIANG TO GUARD MINHONG

Kiangsu Attack Anticipated On Town On Shore
Of Whangpoo

BY D. J. LEWIS

Lootien, Oct. 4.—Minhong, the little town on the Whangpoo recently made famous as an amusement place for Shanghai searchers for excitement and recreation and connected with Shanghai by a first-class motor road, may be the next scene of fighting in this area. This information was given me by the military command at Lootien tonight, for more than a thousand troops were transferred from the Liuhoo sector this afternoon to Minhong.

Whether this means that General Lu is planning finally to withdraw his lines from Sang-kiang to Minhong in order that he can use the Minghong Road as he has been using the Liuhoo road, or whether he is afraid of an attack by Chekiang and Fokien troops brought to Minhong on boats on the Whangpoo is not known, but that something unusual is expected at Minhong is certain because of the transfer of troops and also of munitions from the Liuhoo sector.

I arrived at Lootien at 2:20 this afternoon but the ban against correspondents still holds good on this front and I was unable to proceed any farther. The Chekiang forces however must have things well in hand as the reserve force held at Lootien estimated to number approximately 1,000 men moved late this afternoon upon receipt of urgent orders from Lungkuang to Minhong by motor trucks.

From information received at Lootien no fighting is in progress on the Liuhoo sector today.

The fire reported recently at Lootien destroyed only one shop and dwelling on the main street. No lives were lost. The authorities state it was set on fire by individuals in the employ of the Kiangsu forces. Strict precautions are now being taken to prevent the free movement of similar groups of Kiangsu mercenaries. It is claimed that the Kiangsu 4th Brigade, the crack unit of Tsuchin Chi which has been engaged on the Liuhoo sector, has been completely wiped out, the few remaining troops of this unit being absorbed in other Kiangsu units.

Union Church Will Open Social Program At Informal Concert

The Union Church Literary and Social Guild is commencing its autumn program on Wednesday with an informal musical and concert which has been arranged by various members of the committee. The session promises to be an interesting one in view of the hard work which has been put in by the committee. Membership tickets may be had from any member of the committee for the sum of $1.00, and they are available for both autumn and spring sessions to the end of March, 1925. Details of the committee and program are as follows:

ports that the lull that prevailed throughout the last instant was again broken by the sound of rifles and field pieces that was started at daybreak of the 2nd from the hill district outside Shanhaikwan.

As 8 a.m. on the 2nd, the Chihli troops stationed in the position at a short distance from the walls of Shanhaikwan also participated in the battle. Very inactive firing continued throughout the day, and the activity of aeroplanes of both sides was on this day considerably prevented by the cloudy weather.

The Chihli troops, which are now well entrenched in their strong position, appears to have no intention for the present to make any further advance, though they are trying to hold the Fengtien troops in check by the threat of men-of-war. A large number of the Chihli troops are now being daily concentrated at a point some 5 li to the west of Shanhaikwan, while part of the Chihli troops have already advanced into a valley in the mountains west of Shanhaikwan with a view, it is reported, to threatening the Fengtien forces from the shore region, where, it is expected, a fierce battle may possibly be staged before long.

Peking, Oct. 3.—The death of General Pan Shou-shing seems to be authentic and it is decided by the recent military conference at Peking to appoint General Wang Wei-cheng as the successor to General Pan Shou-shing.

(Eastern News Agency)

Peking, Oct. 3.—It is reported that the Mukden forces had captured Linyuan in the night of the 30th September.

(Eastern News Agency)

Peking, Oct. 3.—Major General Hayashi, the Military Attaché to the Japanese Legation to Peking, who has once stated the impossibility of the attack of Peking by the aeroplanes of the Mukden forces, today stated:

"As the situation develops, attack on Peking by the aeroplanes of the Mukden forces may be considered possible now."

The reason for the possibility is due to the fact that as the position of the flying corps of the Mukden forces has advanced to Suichung from Chinchow as the war has progressed. However, even the Mukden forces would not, it is considered, ignore humanity, and the Japanese residents in Peking should not show any anxiety and the Japanese garrison has already completed all the preparations to guard the Japanese residents with the best of efforts."

(Reuter's Pacific Service)

Mukden, October 4.—The capture of Chihlung by Marshal Chang Tso-li's forces is confirmed.

Linyuan has been captured with much material after several hours of the hardest fighting, with heavy Chihli casualties.

Marshal Chang Tso-li has ordered his Shanhaikwan Army not to advance hastily but carefully to prepare for any attack.

"Rigoletto"

Despite the inclemencies of the weather, and the usual Saturday night counter-attractions, a full house greeted Signor Carpi and his galaxy of operatic singers at the Olympic last evening in their rendition of "Rigoletto," the first master composition of the renowned Verdi.

"Rigoletto" was not the greatest production of Verdi's genius, but its presentation marked the turning point in his career as a composer, and started him upon the highway to greatness. Until 1851 he had labored upon numerous scores, but in each instance just missing universal acclaim. A few had proved dismal failures, and not one had demonstrated real genius. Even "Mazurka," produced in London in 1847, under royal auspices, in which the incomparable Jenny Lind rendered, the part of the heroine, proved a humiliating failure. This heartbreaking experience of the composer, whose prior efforts to achieve had been a series of disappointments must have proved most discouraging, yet, four years later, he burst upon the musical world with an effulgence of glory by the masterful production of "Rigoletto" which captured his native Italy, and carried his fame far over national boundaries to every center of culture in Europe.

This opera was quickly followed by "Il Trovatore" and "La Traviata" and upon the richness of these three renowned successes, his eminence as a musical genius rests secure for all time.

The presentation of a masterpiece of this character, doubtless challenged the courage of Signor Carpi, and its rendition rose to the heights of positive genius, and full credit should be extended for a gracious and genuine effort to please and gratify. E. Tillet, in the character portrayal of the Prince of Mantua, was all that the mind could picture as a Prince, and spontaneous applause greeted his every score. Scammati as Rigoletto fulfilled the part in every particular as was attested by the continuous applause and encores.

Full support was given by the entire cast. Miss Vilcebbi as Gilda and Miss Minotti as Maddalena each most charming in portrayal of their respective lines.

As in all of Verdi's operas, the orchestral instrumentation is varied and of full tone, but is always subordinated to the vocal strains. From ensemble to finale "Rigoletto" was enthusiastically received and today it can be said that Shanghai has really enjoyed grand opera.

Tonight, "Pagliacci" and "Cavalleria Rusticana."

J. Edwards, charged with being drunk and disorderly in the courtyard of the Hongkew Police Station, was sent to jail yesterday by Mr. N. E. Lorton, U. S. Commissioner for ten days. Edwards had gone to the Police Station and asked to be locked up. The request was refused as the police pointed out there was no charge against him. He was ordered out of the station, and on being escorted out assaulted an officer. Edwards then got his way.

Word has just been received from Dr. Joseph Beech, President of the West China Union University that a class of eight girls has been admitted into the University. This is the first time in history that women have had an opportunity for university education in the Province of Szechuen. Formerly all women wishing a college course had to go to Peking or some other distant city. This is considered a significant happening of the new day in China. Chengtu is far removed from what many call civilization, but it is offering education to women on a full equality with men.

The executive committee of the American University will meet on Monday at 12:30 o'clock at the Union Club.

A movement has been started in Hangchow to reconstruct the Thunder Peak Pagoda, which collapsed on the day when the new Tull, Sung Chuan-fang, entered the city.

The first autumn meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Shanghai diocese will meet on Monday, October 13 at the home of Mrs. Nichols at St. John's University.

The Peking Tramway Company, Limited, with the opening day near, is busy inspecting and fixing up tracks and poles throughout the city so as to avoid inconvenience and troubles in the future. As a precaution, the company is to have a preliminary trial on October 6. Its formal opening day will take place on October 10. The company will invite the public to have "joy rides" throughout the company's lines for three days from October 10 to 12 inclusive.

No stocks of coal are now available in Tientsin, with the exception of a small reserve of lump coal, which will be sold only to bona fide household consumers, according to information put out by the Kailan Mining Administration. A few carloads are being received from day to day at the railway, and such coal, when available, is being allotted to the more essential public and commercial requirements of the port.

Ten million dollars is the share of the war expenses which the province of Chihli has undertaken to raise through the Civil Governor, Wang Chen-ping, who is concurrently second in command of the punitive expedition. According to Chinese reports, a conference in Tientsin resulted in the decision to issue a 5th Provincial Loan for $3,000,000 and raise the balance of $7,000,000 through a military levy on all lieutenants. The schedule given in the report places the figure to be raised by a first class lien at $5,000, second class $3,000, and third class $2,000.

ASSAULT CHARGE IS DISMISSED IN BRITISH COURT

Schoolmaster Accused By Child Is Acquitted By Magistrate

In the British Police Court here yesterday the charge against W. D. Anderson, a schoolmaster accused of an indecent assault upon a little girl, was dismissed by Magistrate King.

The case was opened in Court a few days ago, a little girl alleging that the accused had put his hand on her in an indecent way. There was no evidence to support her own, however, though there were a couple of other children, her brother and a smaller girl, playing near her at the time. Mr. Anderson told the Court that he could not remember the incident, when she told her mother of the incident of his lifting her down from the tree, was probably asked a number of questions and became confused. Either this or her story was purely the result of an over-imaginative mind.

Several prominent professional men of Shanghai testified to the high character of the accused.

In summing up the case, Magistrate King pointed out that this was a matter in which actual evidence did not matter very much, as a conviction alone would utterly ruin the defendant, whatever legal punishment might be imposed. The Magistrate had therefore elected to try the case summarily instead of sending the accused to the higher court.

The Court pointed out that the two families were unacquainted, and there was therefore no ulterior motive. There were discrepancies, however, in the story told by the child making the accusation and the story of another child with her at the time. The accused's story had been a candid and straightforward one, he even making the dangerous admission that he had touched the child, though not in any improper way. Furthermore, his conduct afterwards, in approaching the child twice and speaking to them cheerfully, indicated that he was innocent. The charge, therefore, would be dismissed.

The food market is short of supplies, there being practically no fish owing to the prohibition of night fishing.

The police raided one bank owing to a report that it was lending money to Chekiang. The raid caused a panic and a run on several banks, one being obliged to close for 24 hours.

Mosquito Plague Hits Mid-West

Chicago, August 24.—Chicago and vicinity is suffering a plague of mosquitoes—billions of them—of a new and most bloodthirsty variety. These predacious insects have made life miserable for residents at the outer amusement parks, at Ravinia, where summer opera is in progress, and at Winnetka and Oak Brook. Golf links are heavily infested and homes and bedrooms in the suburbs have been invaded by hordes of the pests.

Pond du Lac, Wis., August 24.—The excessively heavy rains of the past few weeks have made this section of Wisconsin a breeding place for mosquitoes and great swarms of the pests have made life miserable for man and beast. Farm work has been halted on land where stagnant water remains. Those farmers who are obliged to work protect their heads and necks with nets.

Brigandage Again Rife In Shantung

Tuli Tseng Orders Suppression
In Tungling Circuit

(Dah Tong News Bureau)
Peking, Oct. 4.—Tuli Tseng Shih-chi of Shantung reports that brigandage has once more become active in the Tungling circuit. He has ordered the brigade under Hu Yi-ju to withdraw from the Tientsin-Pukow line and start the suppression of the bandits.

A telegram from General Wang Chi-hsiang says that following the receipt of funds from Peking, the division under Hu Ching-yi at Tungchow is proceeding to Jehol. The merchants have also resumed their business after an explanation was made of the transfer.

The impossibility of the Peking-Hankow Railway in continuing its monthly remittance of $400,000 each for the Presidential Office and the Office of Marshal Wu Peifu was pointed out by the railway director, Chao Chi-hsien, when he called on Minister of Communications Wu Yu-lin today. Minister Wu has conveyed the views to Tao and Wu, who have consented to transfer the remittance entirely to the Military Council.

Soviet And Japan Await Instructions

(Eastern News Agency)
Peking, Oct. 3.—At today's meeting of the Soviet-Japanese Conference lasting from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m., which was held in the Soviet Embassy, all the pending problems, excepting those about which the Soviet delegate is awaiting instructions from the Moscow Government, were discussed. About the items on which they failed to reach an agreement, the delegates of the two countries agreed to ask their respective Governments for further instructions.

A standard test for eyesight

Don't Short-Weight Yourself!

"I wouldn't let my grocer guess how heavy a pound is—not when I was paying."

But if it weren't for the standards established and the regular inspection of scales and measures, you would go right on paying without knowing whether you were cheated or not.

Guessing and paying—just as you do with your eyesight. For there is an eyesight standard too. An eye-examination is the standard for normal effective eyesight.

No comparison with what your friends see at the same distance will do anything but mislead you. You cannot see through their eyes nor they through yours. But by examining your sight we can tell if it is up to standard and if not, we will prescribe glasses to bring it up to standard. Test with the one standard that can tell you the truth. Have your eyes examined now!

WITHDRAWAL OF CHINESE STIRS LEAGUE CIRCLES

Does Not Indicate That China Is Quitting Altogether, Is Belief

(Reuter's Service)
Geneva, Oct. 3.—The withdrawal of the Chinese Delegation from the Chamber last night is much commented upon though it is not believed to imply China's withdrawal from the League.

(Reuter's Service)
Melbourne, Oct. 3.—In a speech in the House of Representatives today on the Geneva compromise, Mr. S. M. Bruce, the Commonwealth Prime Minister, said that unless anything in the Protocol interfered with Australia's rights there was no need for special action.

(Reuter's Service)
Paris, Oct. 3.—The Council of the League of Nations need today under the chairmanship of M. Paul Hymans (Belgium) the last meeting of the thirtieth sitting. It dealt chiefly with the question of the delimitation of the frontiers of Albania.

It was also decided to accept the offer of the Italian Government regarding the foundation at Rome of an international institute for the unification of droit privé.

Upon the report of M. Benes (Czechoslovakia) an organ has been formed for the purpose of preparing the groundwork for a conference on disarmament.

Albania, Bulgaria, Estonia, France, Greece, Latvia, Poland, Portugal, Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia have signed the protocol. The other delegations stated that they would recommend its signature to their respective Governments.

Today the Council of the League of Nations made some practical dispositions in connection with calling a conference for the reduction of armaments to take place in June 1925.

Trouble Averted At Ningpo As Soldiers Are Promised Pay

(China Press Correspondence)
Ningpo, Oct. 3.—Up to the present Ningpo has been fairly undisturbed by the fortunes of war which are centering around Shanghai. However, last Saturday the native population at least was much worried fearing the outbreak of hostilities. These were averted by the military official in charge here, General Pan, going to Hangchow with several sub-officials and securing the promise from the provincial authorities that the Ningpo soldiers would be paid from the provincial treasury. This promise averted what might have been very unpleasant happenings. Now once again we are resting easy with half-bated breath, in the hope that the war will soon be over and business and life in general can go on in their usual channels.

An Interesting Wedding In Weihaiwei

A fashionable wedding of interest to Shanghai was solemnized at the Church of St. John the Baptist, Port Edward, Weihaiwei, on September 24, in which the contracting parties were Mr. Montgomery Reader Harris, M. C., son of the late Mr. Reader Harris, K. C., and Miss Millicent Damaris Turner, daughter of Sir Skinner and Lady Turner of Shanghai. The above photo was taken in the grounds of Government House.

Yang Sen Seeks Modern Improvements In Chengtu; To Send Wives To U. S.

(China Press Correspondence)
Chengtu, September 26.—General Yang Sen these days is turning Chengtu "upside down". At Lu-chow and Chungking he made a name for himself by his public works. In Chengtu he is showing that he must see improvements of some sort put through. Here it is the widening of streets he is attempting.

His aim first of all is to make two long wide thoroughfares, one from the north to the south gate and one from the east to the west gate. He is forcing the land lords to curtail their frontages, remove all projecting stands, walls, door corners, etc. This involves often no little expense to the people, but they have perforce to meet it. Not only this, but each house owner has to advance $1 per foot of his frontage to repave the street.

Perhaps this last expense has caused the most heartburning. In one street they thought it too heavy and requested to be allowed to make their own repairs which would be in accordance with official requirements, but sanction was withheld. The underlings wanted their "pay" and that necessitated a monetary levy.

If the work gets finished, two motor buses are to be bought which will ply for hire. It will then be seen if their earnings will justify the purchase of others.

As the present political situation is not very reassuring, it is questionable if Yang Sen will be able to complete his roads. Another military combination has been formed in Szechuen. It is one more, though the factors in it are different—Chungking against Chengtu. Yang Sen is said to have united with the Civil Governor and his associates against Teng Si-hou, who is in charge at Chungking. If so, Yang has deserted his best friends and it is a pity. We want peace in Szechuen.

The reason, of course, is the common one, though it is said that opium is another. General Teng wants to root out the growth and traffic of this drug entirely and Yang's policy is to levy very high taxes on it, maintaining that this is the best way of putting an end to the opium-smoking. It may be, but Teng's method is the one that appeals to the foreigners. It proved successful before and there is no reason why it should not do so again.

Yang Sen's wives are being taught English. He plans to send several to America, and if their education there is to be successful, the learning of English is the first step.

If Yang would only turn Christian, he would be a power for good. But by his own confession he is not that. He is progressive in many ways, has high ambitions; genuinely wants to leave his mark for good on his province but has not come to the realization that there is a spiritual Power that must be invoked if righteousness and truth are to spring up in the earth, and that Power is Christianity.

Thrilling Facts About the Fabulous Silver Fox

Modern Romance of the Remarkable New Industry Which Runs Into Countless Thousands, Fed by a Feminine Whim

The Eight Black Silver Fox Puppies That Were Born in One Litter at the Famous Patte & Wolff Ranch, Peterboro, Ont.

Magnificent Male Black ("Silver") Fox, Recently Sold for the Tidy Sum of $10,000.

The Silver Fox Pelts on This Rack Are Valued at $180,000.

THIS is the golden romance of the Silvery Fleece.

A dozen years ago a score of overworked hens were scratching the gravel in the barren yard back of the slab-board house of Angus McTavish near Peterboro, Ontario.

The Cook of the Walk made a tremendous ado over a little worm he had discovered. There was a wild scramble of the individual members of the harem to his side. At the psychological moment he gobbled down the worm, to the disgust, if not the surprise, of his flock.

Very much satisfied with himself, he leaped up on a stump and crew lustily. He was so busy he did not notice the hens scattering, wildly excited.

The last note had scarcely left his throat when a quick blow, delivered by a dark, sinister form by his side, broke his neck and brought his vainglorious career to an untimely end.

"Angus, quick; there's a black fox in the yard," whispered Mrs. McTavish to her husband.

A black fox! A fortune if they could catch it!

There was a wild scramble, a hard chase and they did capture it—alive, and penned it up against the day they could take it into Peterboro and get enough money for the pelt to pay off the mortgage.

Late that evening McTavish was amazed to see another black fox around the pen where the other one was confined. It was a magnificent male, pure black, with a glorious, white-tipped bush. The one in the pen was a female, undoubtedly his mate. And he had come to succor her Foxes are monogamous and extremely loyal.

McTavish tried to catch the male, too, but it escaped. Next morning it was back again. For three days the battle of wits kept up. Then the male fox, apparently unwilling to live without his mate, allowed himself to be captured.

They were rich, fabulously rich. Two black foxes, whose pelts at that time were worth at least $2,000 each!

They delayed their visit to Peterboro, gloating over their wealth. Then Mrs. McTavish discovered a secret. In a short time there might be some little black foxes! That was why the male had been so solicitous of his mate's welfare.

The little black pups came—four of them length and texture. A single pelt has been known to bring as much as $35,000. But for some reason the foxes do not thrive in captivity in Labrador, and the species, hunted from post to pillar because of the great value of their pelts, has almost become birth, the vixen (that's what the mother fox is called) presented her proud husband with eight magnificent babies. The pelts of these puppies alone would be worth $700 each, or $5,600 for the litter.

No animal, wild or human, is better fed than the silver fox during its brief life. Fresh meat, berries, fish and game are given to the foxes—a better fare than the ranch-house employees get. The puppies must have 532 calories a day. Their food, after they are weaned—and very often a common pussy-cat acts as wet-nurse for the baby foxes—consists of lean meats, smelts, herring, liver, yeast-bread, suet, rice, vegetables, rolled oats and eggs.

Some persons think that raising foxes for their pelts is cruel. But it is not nearly as cruel as trapping them while they are living in their wild state. Seldom is the trapped fox killed instantly. Usually it is caught and held fast, in excruciating pain, sometimes for two or three days, until death ends its misery. Near time its mate and young starved. So that as long as women wear furs—and they'll wear them until eternity unless fashion decrees otherwise—the scientific raising and destruction of foxes is unquestionably the most merciful—and profitable.

—as handsome as their parents. And when the time arrived to go to Peterboro, it was the four pups, but fully matured, that were sacrificed. For a great idea had come to Angus McTavish. He would breed black foxes (the proper name for the silver fox fur of fashion) for the market.

Shipment of Forty Crates of Brood Foxes From an Ontario Ranch. These Foxes are Worth Approximately $160,000.

That was how a new industry—silver fox ranching—was started. Last year, in Canada alone, 28,000 silver foxes were bred and sacrificed for their pelts, which brought more than extinct there. They do well in Prince Edward Island, where a number of ranches are located.

It was along about 1910 that the black fox broke the neck of the strutting rooster in the back yard of Angus McTavish, near Peterboro, Ontario, and became the indirect cause of the establishment of a new

"Lullaby" Is Attraction At Apollo

The management of the Apollo Theater regrets that they were unable to present the "The Lullaby", last Thursday. Postponement was forced by unavoidable delay in shipping the film.

Now, "Lullaby" is due to arrive today and will be shown immediately and the management is of an opinion that a more noble and more sincere presentation has seldom been offered to the public. "Lullaby" is the story of Tony Fillo, who goes back to Italy from America to claim his bride, Felipa. At the docks on their return is Pietro Martino, Tony's friend. For six months, this married life of Tony and Felipa endures without a flaw. Then one evening Pietro makes unsought advances.

Later, that evening, when she is able to talk to Tony alone, she suggests that they persuade Pietro to live elsewhere. He cannot understand her attitude, and finally tells her that the place is too big for two of them alone. She blushes and whispers to him that soon there will probably be another in the family.

In another part of the city is the home of Judge Marvin, a home haunted by the tragedy of childlessness. Mrs. Marvin, however, finds joy in little Tommy Elliott, son of Thomas Elliott, who lives next door, the judge's best friend since childhood.

It is before Judge Marvin that, months later, Tony is tried for the murder of his friend Pietro. It is the age-old story: Tony sees Pietro attack Felipa and rushes into the room. In the fight which follows he shoots his friend to death. Tony is charged with the crime: Felipa as an accessory. Judge Marvin is finally forced to pronounce the sentence, murder in the second degree and hanging by the neck until dead for Tony. The two lovers are wricken dumb by the blow. They cling to each other, beg that they be not separated; finally the futility of it all overwhelms them.

While Tony is paying with his life on the gallows, in the hospital of the prison a daughter is born to Felipa whom she calls Antoinette. For the following three years the child lives there in the prison cell with her mother and all the sunshine of Felipa's life is centered about the small golden head.

During these three years, Judge Marvin has won the governorship of the state. He sends little Antoinette to an orphanage; later his wife is so charmed with the child that they adopt her. There Antoinette stays while seventeen years pass—Tommy has grown to young manhood and a pretty romance is growing between them.

Felipa's sentence has expired, she journeys to the orphanage and there is told that Antoinette has been adopted but that it is against the rules to tell her by whom. Felipa pleads with the matron, who is obdurate. The matron goes about her business. As soon as she has left the room, Felipa gets down the record book and discovers where her child has been adopted. Marvin! As soon as Felipa has left, the matron discovers what she has done and phones the Marvin home that the mother is on her way. Marvin directs that every gate to the grounds be closed and guarded.

That evening, Antoinette's coming-out party is to be held. Mr. and Mrs. Marvin are perturbed; they feel that they should tell Antoinette, in justice to her, concerning her origin. Mrs. Marvin pleads, however, that they wait till the party is over. Felipa peers through the iron gates and seek her Antoinette dancing and promenade with the handsome Tommy. Tommy again tells Antoinette of his love and pleads for her answer. She begs him to wait. As a car slows down to enter the gate, Felipa clambers on the running board and thus enters the grounds.

Marvin has entered the library. The curtain behind him moves, and Felipa looks in. She snatches up a paper knife which lies on the desk. Marvin knows he is in real danger, but he does not flinch as he says quietly, "But Antoinette is happy here."

Felipa slips behind a curtain as Antoinette enters, saying to Marvin "Daddy Jim, I've never asked you about who I really am; but tonight I have to know. Tommy has asked me to marry him." "You love him, child?" he inquires. She replies that she does but that she could never marry him with the prison memories still in her mind. He asks her whether she would refuse to marry Tommy unless she was certain that her family was as clean and fine as his, and she replies that she couldn't go through with it.

Felipa, listening behind the curtains, hears this; the knife which she has been clutching in her hand drops to the floor and she turns sadly toward the window. As she draws herself away from the house, Felipa stumbles over a sleeping dog which attacks her. When Felipa comes to consciousness, she calls Marvin to her and assures him that she understands his viewpoint and that Antoinette must never be told anything about her. But it was Marvin's contriving which, after Tommy and Antoinette were married, arranged that Felipa, in the guise of nurse, should work for them, where in the years to come she was able to sing to the new generation the old lullaby.

adaptation of William Collier's laughable stage success, produced on a very elaborate scale, no expense has been spared to make this production the best of comedy screen photoplays.

Twenty-one thousand dollars is a reasonable price for a regular laugh in the opinion of Thomas H. Ince, who paid that sum for the screen rights of "The Hottentot".

The picture is even funnier than the stage play of the same name in which Collier scored one of the biggest hits of his career, both in New York and on tour. In addition to the endless laughs there is a steeplechase that makes even the blasé fan sit up and take notice.

Douglas MacLean plays the role which Collier created, with equal success. Pretty Madge Bellamy is more winsome than ever as the girl in the case and Raymond Hatton is the third member of an irresistible trio of laugh-producers.

Nearly forty miles of film was used to produce "The Hottentot." Most of the two hundred thousand celluloid feet consumed in the picture was used to take the steeplechase which forms the climax of the story.

The race, which is one of the most exciting ever screened, was so difficult to take, owing to its rapidity of movement, that a whole battery of cameras was used to get the action from a series of different angles. As a result some wonderful pictures have been secured. You get all the thrills of a fast horse race and none of the discomforts of standing in a racing stand on a hot day surrounded by a jam of shrieking fans, dancing up and down on your feet and screaming in your ears.

Director Del Andrews worked a month filming the steeplechase. A number of crack polo players and gentlemen riders rode in. It was a lark. Several of them were injured in falls at the hurdles, but they all declared that it was worth while to have taken part in such a sporting event.

With its unique combination of sure-fire comedy and powerful drama, "The Hottentot" is certain to win immediate recognition as the biggest comedy drama special of the season.

Enid Bennett And Arbuckle At The Isis

"Her Husband's Friend", a Thomas H. Ince production, adapted from Marjorie Cooke's story, "The Incubus", will be the chief feature at the Isis Theater at the opening of the week. The story is about a neglected wife. The plot is unique and well handled. Enid Bennett as the neglected wife plays an ideal role. The heavy part of the story is relieved with comedy. Both settings and acting are well done.

Roscoe Arbuckle in "The Round Up" will be the attraction at the Isis from Wednesday until Saturday.

The millions of film patrons who have laughed themselves into various stages of hysterics at the famous Fatty Arbuckle comedies released by Paramount will have a new thrill when the comedy star appears in a legitimate role in

The stellar part of Slim Hoover in "The Round Up".
By arrangement with Joseph Chenck, the famous comedian was secured for this engagement and has proved to the satisfaction of everybody concerned that he is not only able to interpret comedy but also dramatic characters with the greatest effect.

Tom Forman wrote the scenario and also plays the hero in the picture, while Mabel Julienne Scott is the pretty heroine. Irving Cummings, Jane Acker, Eddie Auther and others appear in the all star cast.

The photography by Paul Perry is said to be of the finest quality, while the general tone of the picture is far above the average. Thrills, sensational episodes, fights with Indians and outlaws and similar western features keep the spectators on the anxious seat while the participation of Reece Arbutnot in the story lends an added tustre to the production.

Feature Films Announced By The Victoria

Another special screen production is announced for the Victoria Theatre on Monday to Wednesday when the latest Henry Russell film, entitled "The Truth" will be screened. According to the management the picture is a decidedly worth while.

Henry Russell, the well known scenario writer and director, has concocted a screen story that at once arrests the interest of the spectators and moves on swiftly with an action that gains momentum as the play unfolds.

The central figure is Daniel Swift played by Maurice Renaud, a wealthy man who has always been able to buy whatever he wanted. He bought a young and pretty wife but is too old to hold her when a younger and stronger man comes along to pay her attention.

The "women in the case" are Miss Violette Jye, famed on the screen for her remarkably skilful delineations of cultured society women, and Mme. Emmy Lynn who portrays a typical rural wildflower, sturdy and healthy, unaccustomed to the ways of the world, but possessed of a strength of character that comes to those who dwell close to the heart of nature.

The action of the play takes the spectator first to the country-seat of a poor aristocratic family and then suddenly it shifts to the big metropolis with its whirl of social activities.

For the balance of the week beginning on Thursday the Victoria presents Kenneth Harlan's latest creation, "Temporary Marriage", a rather elaborate treatment of the divorce theme. It is done in a slightly sensational fashion with effective scenes pointing indirectly to the evils of being too worldly-minded. A trial scene furnishes a good climax, carrying the suspense to the close.

Mrs. Manners is anxious to secure a divorce because her husband fails to follow the frivolous pace which she has set. Preston Duayne, hoping to win her fortune, encourages her. Her daughter, Hazel, arrives in time to learn of her mother's folly and in attempting to save her, gets highly involved in a scandal which results in the murder of Preston. Eventually, Mrs. Manners and Hazel are freed from suspicion and Mrs. Manners learns her lesson.

The cast is a group of performers who have established their success so many times that their appearance is bound to attract interest. Mildred Davis gives a performance that is unusually appealing. She is more than a pretty, dainty ingenue—she is a considerable attraction in itself—she is distinctly clever. She handles situations, not in themselves strikingly original, in a manner that deserves and gets undivided attention. One scene where she becomes ill because of not being used to drinking is an especially good example of her intelligence in not overacting.

Other favorites in the cast are Kenneth Harlan, Stuart Holmes, Maude George and Myrtle Steadman.

London Revue Stars Planning Tour In East

Miss Lee White and Mr. Clay Smith the well-known London revue stars have completed arrangements to tour the East during the coming 1924-25 season. The tour commences at Gibraltar, December 5th, with Cairo, Bombay, Calcutta, Rangoon, Singapore, Hongkong, Shanghai, and Manila to follow. At the conclusion of the eastern itinerary, they will proceed to Australia, and New Zealand. Miss Lee White and Mr. Clay Smith will be supported by a company of 25, including the famous Lee White 12, "The Little Peaches".

All the old favorites of the Queens, Vaudeville, and Ambassador theaters will be brought up-to-date. It is intended that the "Little Peaches" shall be a special feature of the performances, as this will be the first time for many years that such a large English dancing troupe has been introduced in revue and musical.

The Eastern portion of the tour will be under the direction of James McGrath Ltd. Mr. McGrath the managing director of this concern, will probably be remembered as a leading artist in the pre-war Bandman Opera days, when "The Merry Widow", "Count of Luxembourg", "The Dollar Princess", "Waltz Dream", "The Pink Lady", and "Quaker Girl", all excellent pieces, were the vogue.

Divided House Reigns In U.S. Politics

Wives Who Express Opposite Views To Those Of Husbands

(By Our Own Correspondent)

New York, Sept. 5.—"United we stand, divided we fall." "We must hang together or we will hang separately." A house divided against itself will fall: these thoughts have been gleaned from past reading though no attempt is here made to vouch for the accuracy of the quotations. Somewhere else someone said that a man who failed to govern his own household might not be looked to to rule a city. But those were days before universal suffrage became effective in America, days before the right to vote had been extended to women. Now, women vote, serve on juries and quite generally exercise their equal rights of suffrage, and of course free speech.

Recently, a campaign manager for one of the candidates for the Presidency of the United States was selected. Reports are to the effect that said campaign manager resides part of the time, at least, with his helpmate at their home in West Virginia, and that the campaign manager is busy trying to convince prospective voters that the welfare of the country depends upon their voting for the proper candidate. It is also necessary to elect a Vice-President, and the two necessities go hand in hand as sisters of the same parentage. Anything said derogatory to one may injure the other. Especially, as some think, would this seem to be true where the campaign manager's wife should see fit to express views opposite to those held by one of the candidates in whose behalf said husband is laboring.

Governor Chas. W. Bryan, Vice-Presidential candidate on the Democratic ticket, thinks that the defense day plans, just at this time, may be misunderstood abroad as a military gesture. But Mrs. Shaver does not share his views, according to reports, and has said so. Inasmuch as Mrs. Shaver's husband is trying to elect Governor Bryan, the question is: How much assistance is he receiving from his wife?

POET IN SECLUSION

My does are wise and bite well, says poet d'Annunzio, according to one dispatch. From another report it seems that Morris Gest paid the poet a visit while in Italy recently. All in all, it would not seem unreasonable to conclude that Gabriele d'Annunzio is in seclusion in his villa, where he is probably writing another play for the stage. That play may be expected to assume important proportions and take high rank among productions for the stage. Rumor has it that Morris Gest of 'The Miracle' fame, who has just returned to New York, will stage the anticipated play in question. Indications are that the poet d'Annunzio has gone into monastic seclusion and prediction is to the effect that from that isolation will emerge a new play in due course of time.

There will be many who will be in sympathy with the wise precaution suggested by the attributed statement concerning dogs that bite well. Doubtless, nobody, except a negligible few of the very grumpiest sort, will find any fault with a poet, engaged in writing a play for the modern stage, who does not wish to be disturbed in his work.

MOTION PICTURES BY RADIO

Recently efforts to communicate with Mars by radio failed. A few months ago photographs by electrical transmission over wires was announced. Now the broadcasting of motion pictures is predicted. One prophet of wireless developments thinks that within a year the broadcasting of motion pictures by radio will be possible and in practice. But little more than prediction is available at this time, details being withheld until subsequent experimentation has been conducted. The number of radio fans may be augmented provided that it becomes possible to enjoy motion pictures at home along with music over the radio.

FINANCIAL STABILISATION OF EUROPE

The proposed so-called new German bank which is to be created under, and by virtue of certain provisions in the Dawes plan, will aid in German reconstruction particularly, and in European financial rehabilitation generally, according to opinions in well-informed circles here. Of course, it is proposed to make a loan to Germany in pursuance of the plan worked out. This latter prospect has apparently revived hope in business circles in Germany to a considerable extent. Recently, and prior to the London conferences, reports from persons in business in Berlin indicated that commercial matters there were far from satisfactory, bankruptcy was on the increase and actual want was widespread. But a note of new hope has been struck and an era of greater prosperity is being predicted for the near future.

A great deal is being heard concerning the German loan, the general opinion being that it will not materialise before the latter part of October. Before full power can be vested in negotiators to sign the necessary papers, it would seem that numerous obstacles will have to be removed from the path leading to consummation of the loan. Doubtless an exchange of views around the round table will consume some time. Various offices representing different Governments will have to give the matter consideration as well as officials of banking and financial institutions. Altogether, it would appear that preliminaries to be dispensed with will consume considerable time before the loan can be come "un fait accompli."

Various views and opinions have been expressed during the past few days concerning economic and financial conditions in Europe as they are affected by recent developments. One review which purports to have been made by a leading local financial institution, says, in part:

"Forward-looking observers profess to see the beginning of a new era in our financial and commercial life; that beginning being marked by the lowering of money rates here coincident with the steps taken abroad for a settlement of the European turmoil. We have overflowing credit resources; these can be used in immensely increased investment in home industries, as has already been pointed out, or they can be used in part in making advances abroad. Unless all signs fail, we shall presently see our huge gold holdings made available for world commercial credits."

A warning is sounded against heading investment in German industrial or other enterprises. The review says:

"Little will be gained by rushing into a situation that is still far from clear, and that is subject to many possible changes. Individuals who lost money speculating in German marks are showing fresh interest again in Germany, possibly in the hope of recovering what they have lost. But beyond the formal German Government loan which is to be negotiated here, wisdom will promote great care in the placing of large sums at the disposal of outside borrowers. With short-term advances, made in the form of secured banking credit, the situation will be tested out properly; also a better balance will thus be given to the international financial structure. American finance will be justified in enlarging its foreign activities for the benefit of commercial business only as definite direction is given foreign affairs. "According in the matter of the reparations plan is only one step toward solving the difficulties of Europe. It is only a beginning and no good purpose would be gained by picturing it in any other light. There is a long and weary road yet to be traveled before peace can be considered fairly established. The plan on which accord has been reached is still to be put into effect. Then there is still to be met the enormous question of the inter-allied debts. There is the question of bringing government expenses within the limits of tax collection. There are the questions of currency reforms and trade, not to mention a host of economic and political issues which come out of the war and post-war disruptions.

"Much is still to be done to (Continued on Page 13)

out the bitter consequences of ten years of hostility and misunderstanding, but at least a start has been made, and cleared men are satisfied for the moment with the prospect that society as a whole will be much the gainer by the stabilizing of Europe. Henceforward, instead of looking out upon a world shaken to its foundations by war, men look for one step toward another toward the establishment of real peace and international well-being.

THE TREND OF MODERN TIMES

Are people happier today than they were one hundred years ago? This question will be answered in different ways by different persons. Surely, the age is one wherein the triumph of science and reform, the accumulation of wealth and increased industrial productivity, are matters which are so obvious that no dispute can arise concerning their existence. Compare the age with that of George Washington.

Numerous conveniences today will be found that did not exist in the ordinary citizen has more comforts than formerly; it may all be said that what are necessary of life today were luxuries.

But is there more happiness there are those who believe that the pursuit and yearning for wealth constitute the modern citizen's chief occupation; that his action is shaped with the end in view of attaining wealth as a reward of all effort in youth and early manhood. If this, in fact, be true, then it would seem that riches is King, that business is a means to an end, and commerce is carried on for the sake of money.

If man is serving God less and Mammon more, following material things to the exclusion of spiritual, is he more in the path of happiness than formerly?

THE AVERAGE BROADWAY THEATER

Irrespective of whether there is or not in the average Broadway play, the bright lights bid fair to continue to draw their crowds in the future as they have in the past. Like moth-flies, are people attracted to the theater district. They go to be amused and entertained rather than to be instructed by artful performances.

It may be an ideal to be wished, but it would not seem to be a necessity in the modern theater.

Old Theory On Ptomaine Hit By Physician

Dr. Ernest C. Dickson of San Francisco, expert on the subject of food poisoning, started the annual convention of the Pacific Association of Railway Surgeons at its initial session yesterday with the assertion that "there is no such thing as ptomaine poisoning."

Dr. Dickson continued: "It is true that microbes which have been named 'ptomaine' have been isolated, but it is equally true that they have never been the immediate cause of poisoning the system."

BOTULISM ALWAYS FATAL

There are but two rough classes of food poisoning—botulism, the germs of which are sometimes created in preserved foods before they reach the mouth; and para-typhoid, the germs of which are created in fresh foods after they reach the digestive organs.

"Botulism, after its symptoms manifest themselves (which is from sixteen to thirty-six hours), kills twelve times out of twelve. There is no prevention save to thoroughly heat all preserved foods before serving, and there is no remedy whatsoever after the victim begins to show violent symptoms."

"The familiar remark of the housewife, 'I know what is in this jar because I put it up myself,' has killed eighteen women that I know of. Often a teaspoonful of what they taste contains enough botulinic bacteria to kill 10,000 guinea pigs."

is different from the rest brief, can steam the bacteria to death, something the housewife cannot do."

The convention will close today at the Medical building. Dr. William Shipley, vice-president, presided yesterday in place of Dr. George Stout of Ukiah, president, who was unable to be present. Among the officers at the convention are Dr. Fred Lux, treasurer, and Dr. William Cummin, both of San Francisco.

Prince Of Wales Shocks Shipmates

Aboard the S. S. Berengaria, August 24.—The disciples of dame convention aboard the Berengaria have not recovered from the flagrant violation of her precepts by the Prince of Wales' party last night in appearing in the dining salon for dinner attired in street dress. Solomon in all his glory did not equal the majority of women between 14 and 84 years of age who, resplendent with fine raiment and sparkling jewels, dined at dinner until his highness appeared at 8:30, accompanied by General Trotter, Captain Lascelles and two friends. All eyes were turned to him as he and his party passed before the beautifully decorated table in a secluded wing of the upper dining salon.

Apparently it did not meet with the Prince's approval as he surveyed it.

DECLINE SPECIAL TABLE

He ran his fingers through his hair and then motioned his guests to a smaller table nearby, where the party seated itself to the amusement of the passengers and the consternation of the stewards.

Lord and Lady Mountbatten, also attired in street dress, took seats at an adjoining table.

After dinner he puffed nervously at a cigarette for a time and then suddenly rose and led his party to a lounge, where they remained until after eleven, while anxious dowagers and their daughters breathed silent prayers for his appearance in the ball room, where dancing was in progress since the ship left Cherbourg at 10 o'clock.

WOMEN DISAPPOINTED

About 11:30 the Prince and his party appeared at the ball room door and nearly disrupted the morale of the sundry fox trotter, and after a few minutes disappeared in the direction of the Imperial suite.

The expectant, hopeful light that had appeared in the feminine eyes at his appearance was replaced by one of disappointment, and the ballroom soon was deserted.

Wool From China Goes Into American Carpets

U. S. Customs Duty Is Refunded On Certificate From Manufacturer

BY GEORGE W. MISSEMER

To the man in the street it must always appear somewhat of a mystery that, despite the fact that America levies an exceedingly heavy duty on raw wool—so heavy that the wearing of woollen clothes, whether internally or externally, is almost a luxury in the United States—many millions of tails worth of wool are exported annually from China to America, despite the fact that the wool from China is of very poor quality—in fact so very poor that it stands at the bottom of the list in the wool classifications of the world.

The explanation of this apparent anomaly is that nearly all the wool that goes from China to America is used in the manufacture of carpets, and as such it is accorded exceptional treatment as regards passing the Customs House, amounting in the end practically to its entering America free of duty.

The procedure when wool from China goes through the Customs House at the American port is somewhat as follows: The importer duty pays the duty, something in the neighborhood of twelve cents a pound—usually at the New York Customs House, whence the greater part of the wool imported from China is shipped to Philadelphia, which is the center of the carpet industry in the United States.

There is, however, a provision in the Customs tariff to the effect that if a properly attested certificate is produced within three years showing that any or all of the wool has been used in the manufacture of carpets, then the duty paid will be refunded to the extent of the proportion of the wool so used. In such circumstances, the export of wool from China has reached very respectable proportions. According to the report of Chinese Maritime Customs, the export during 1922 was over eleven million tails (about seven and a half million gold dollars) and all except about ten percent of the above quantity went to the United States.

On the other hand, if Chinese wool had to pay the usual heavy duties imposed on wool imported to the United States, it would have no chance whatever of entering the country, as it is of exceedingly poor quality, is soiled and dirty, and admixed with foreign matter to an extent almost unknown in the wool from any other country. The wool from China comes under the classification of wools known as "Carpet wool."

A matter of considerable interest to those engaged in the Chinese wool trade is that according to a recent notification in the "Ekonomicheskaya Zhizn" ("Economic Life"), which is a sort of official commercial organ for the Government, the export of carpet wools is again permitted from Russia, thus putting an end to the embargo on exportation which has been in force for several years. The notification states, among other things, that these carpet wools have accumulated to a very large extent and are not suitable for the ordinary textile trade of America. If it is really true that large quantities of this low grade wool have accumulated in Russia, it will mean serious competition for the wool exporters from China, who, at any rate, owing to the high price of silver, find business rather difficult at present, particularly taken in conjunction with the fact that the imports of wool into America generally have been decreasing of late.

Nearly all the wool going out of China is exported from the port of Tientsin. The sheep from which it is taken are the well known Asian breed with very broad tails, a fair average of the width being about ten inches, the thickness being about three inches. The broad tail is formed of fat and has the same relation to the sheep that the hump has to the camel. During the bitter winter of North China and Mongolia, when the sheep have to forage for their food, they live principally from the fat in the tail. The wool from the tail is, by the way, of much better quality, than that surrounding the body, the fleece being several times as long. Chinese sheep, being bred mostly for food, the wool being merely incidental, it is not surprising that it is of a poor quality, and seeing the small attention that the sheep get, it is only natural that it should be soiled, dirty and full of foreign substances.

Although the Customs statistics issued by the Chinese Maritime Customs do not make the point quite clear, it is a well known fact that a great deal of the wool exported from China actually comes from Mongolia, probably much of it coming across the border in dribbles without the formality of its passing any Customs barrier. Of course, a considerable quantity of this Mongolian wool is also brought to Kalgan, whence it is brought down to Tientsin by rail, where it is relieved of some of its grosser impurities, baled and sent on board steamer—hardly ever direct for America, however, but transhipped, either in Japan or in Shanghai—more frequently at the latter port.

Hankow Trade

The British Chamber of Commerce, Hankow, states in its weekly trade circular dated September 24:

Bar silver opened the week at 34.15-16 and with minor fluctuations closed at 35.1-16 ready and forward. New York London cross rate at 44.74, on the 18th instant slowly declined closing at 44.64 with a firmer tendency. T. T. opened at 3-5 1/4, dropped to 3-5 1/2 on the 29th instant and closed at 3-5 1/4. 4 m-credits done at 3-6 1/4 at opening weakened slightly during week, but firmed up and business was done at the close at 3-6 1/4 September December. Chinese market rates: Shanghai T. 99 nominal. Local currency dollars 69.35. Native interest 7 1/2 percent.

EXPORTS
More general activity, chiefly in wood oil and vegetable tallow, prices for which commodities have appreciated sharply during the week. Hides are in demand, but local prices are too high and prospect of supplies too uncertain.

IMPORTS

Piece Goods & Yarn:—No improvement to report. No demand. Clearances poor. Financial situation unchanged.

BLACK TEA

There has been a continuance of the demand for tea on this market and some 22,000 H-c have been disposed of.

Total settlements to-date are 230,000 H-c while stocks of first crop tea are 77,000 and second crop 25,060 H-c. Fresh tea has come on offer to the extent of about 8,000 H-c, but very little of it is of interest, as part is distinctly out of condition while proportions of the balance are either old season's tea or else has got to be of such.

A fair quantity of the better grades has been settled at what must be considered very good prices for the tea men, but demand for teas under T. 204 has been more in evidence.

Piece Goods Market

Messrs. Ilbert & Co., Ltd., state in their market report dated October 3:

We can only repeat our writing of last week that the military situation remains unchanged, but would mention that the outcome of operations in the local sector would now appear to depend upon developments pending in the Sunkiang area where important movements of troops are taking place.

Business is limited to a small demand from Szechuen which, however, is concentrated chiefly on Cotton Yarn, and although rates of interest in native financial circles are lower than they have been for a long time past the movement of cargo to outlets other than that province is practically prohibited by the reluctance of the banks to finance any but a very few of their strongest clients.

As far as Shanghai itself is concerned the outstanding question is the supply of rice which is steadily dwindling, the situation being aggravated by the imposition of a tax of Mex: $1.00 per picul on all supplies arriving from the interior, by way of a levy to finance the local armies.

Needless to say there have been practically no communications with Manchester on the subject of new business but private advice indicate that manufacturers are disinclined to give way in view of the recent sharp advance in the New York quotations for cotton which has resulted from the "bearish" tone of the latest reports on the condition of the new crop.

The quotation from New York, which stood at G. cts. 24.70 a week ago, is telegraphed today at G. cts. 26.90.

New Record Set In Silk Cargo Race

Washington, D. C., August 23.—Uncle Sam recently scored a big victory in one of the most dramatic races ever staged by trade—the raw silk transport race. The Great Northern Railway became a big factor in establishing this world's record, hauling a special cargo of silk over its line, 1,784 miles from Seattle to St. Paul in the swift time of 38 hours, 50 minutes. This was an average speed of 45.9 miles per hour, faster than the fastest of any of the crack passenger trains of the country.

The entire course of this race was 8,300 miles. Swiftest steamships, special trains, seaplanes and airplanes participated. But there was no cheering crowd because every mile of the race had to be concealed with the closest secrecy. The stakes amounted to millions. There is a reason why silk is rushed from Yokohama to New York at breakneck speed, outdistancing the best passenger service.

With the exception of gold and silver bullion, silk probably is the most precious commodity, weight for weight, transported on a large scale by commerce. A single train hauls five million dollars worth of silk. Just as it costs dear to ship money, high charges are put on silk shipments.

The saving of two day sailing time between Yokohama and Seattle makes a difference of fifty cents a bale at New York. Interest on the millions of dollars tied up multiples at the rate of thousands of dollars a day and in addition there is costly insurance. In the silk trade time literally means money.

The world's record on the Yokohama-New York silk course was set up a few months ago when the Orient was brought within 13 days 3 hours and 8 minutes of Manhattan.

The new record established is 12 days, 14 hours and 36 minutes. Special port forces moved the rich consignment in three hours to the silk train waiting with steam up. The swift Oriental Limited trains take 70 hours to reach Chicago; the "reefer" as the silk special is known to rail-roads, made it in 48 hours, 24 minutes, a total of 73 hours across the continent from Seattle to Jersey City.

Weather Reports

Oct. 5.—Cloudy & cool weather, threatening some showers. Fresh N'ly breezes over the Yellow Sea and over our coasts. Cyclonic circulation between the Chekiang coast and the Loochoos, because of a narrow centre, formed over Formosa, and moving N-Eward. Rough weather between Luzon & the Molucco-Sinas, because of the Pacific Ocean typhoon, apparently inclining W-N'ward. Stormy weather between the Pratas & the Paracels, because of the typhoon continuing W-N'ward.

Shanghai, Sunday, October 5, 1924

The East Window

THE Saturday Evening Post, widely circulated American magazine, published in its issue of September 6 the following editorial dealing with the subject of Japanese emigration to the United States and Chinese emigration to Japan:

"Mr. Wilfrid Fleisher, Tokio correspondent of The New York Times, lately sent to that journal a copyrighted dispatch which is of peculiar interest to Americans because of its implication that Japan, as well as ourselves, has had her immigration troubles and has endeavored to alleviate them by means which have proved distasteful to a friendly power. Early in August the Chinese Government lodged a protest at Tokio—the seventh since 1922—taking exception to the action of the Japanese Government in restricting the entry of Chinese laborers on the ground that these limitations are at variance with the spirit of existing Sino-Japanese treaties. The position taken by the foreign office at Tokio is that there has been no discrimination against China; that her nationals are upon the same footing as other aliens, and that all foreign laborers are bound by the decree which requires them to get permission from local authorities before taking up their abode. This answer appears to be logical and straightforward; but according to the Times correspondent, none but Chinese laborers are now seeking admission into Japan, and therefore they are the only ones who are adversely affected by the attitude of the Tokio government. It looks very much as if this situation affords another example of legislation which treats all alike in theory, but which is nevertheless discriminatory in operation. We have no intention of taking sides in the matter. We feel at liberty, however, to point out that the more certain Japan is of the justice of her contention, the firmer her conviction that restriction of the admission of Chinese coolies is well within her rights as a sovereign state, the more readily she should become reconciled to very similar sentiments entertained on this side of the Pacific."

When General Wu Pei-fu orders one of his generals to construct thirty li of new road in three days, as the news reports of a few days ago indicated, it shows that at least one prominent Chinese official has realized the importance of roads in China for military purposes at least. Here in the Shanghai area, had it not been for the motor road running from Shanghai to the town of Liuho, General Lu Yung-hsiang undoubtedly would have been defeated long ago. The fact that his forces can send supplies by motor truck from the arsenal here direct to the front lines, has saved the day for him thus far. It is an unfortunate fact that the only modern roads which have been built in China in recent years have been for military purposes, but this does not detract from the usefulness of the road for general use during ordinary times, providing, of course, the highways are well located. If the present war accomplishes nothing more than to demonstrate the great necessity for modern road construction in China, perhaps it will not have been fought altogether in vain. Just how far behind China is in the matter of modern road construction is shown in the following report of highway conditions in the United States: "There are now in the United States, according to the Federal Bureau of Public Roads, a total of 2,819,386 miles of rural highways. As nearly as it is possible to determine, the mileage of the various types of pavement is as follows: Gravel, 175,900 miles; macadam, 100,000 miles; sheet asphalt, asphaltic concrete, asphalt block and asphalt macadam, 50,000 miles; Portland cement concrete, 27,000 miles; brick, stone block and miscellaneous, 10,000 miles. Exclusive of sand clay roads, there are now 340,000 miles of paved highways. Forty thousand miles of paved roads were constructed last year. The construction of asphalt roads during 1923 was greatly in excess of any previous year, there being laid 102,000,000 square yards of asphalt paving on the roads and streets of the country, compared to 82,700,000 square yards in 1922, and 68,000,000 square yards in 1921. The increase in the asphaltic types is due, according to the engineers, to recognition of the shock absorbing and waterproofing characteristics of asphaltic compositions, which protect foundations from the impact of traffic and give them immunity from destruction through moisture and temperature changes."

The American Review of Reviews for September devotes considerable space to Capt. Robert Dollar and calls him the outstanding single figure in American shipping and one of the world's leaders in marine transportation. After telling how Mr. Dollar arrived in America when he was fourteen years of age and of his first job at sixty cents a week, his career is traced from his purchase of a little coasting ship several years ago to the present, when his company now owns and operates eighteen steamers and seven sailing vessels, besides tugs, launches, and lighters—and all but four of them are under the American flag. His latest venture in round-the-world passenger and freight service receives this comment: "With seven liners purchased from the Shipping Board, Captain Dollar early this year struck out on an uncharted path and launched the first round-the-world passenger and freight service. The originality of the enterprise caught the imagination of the shipping world, and his courage in carrying it through, despite the drawbacks of operating vessels under U. S. registry, won him high praise. Early in his steamship career, Captain Dollar was identified chiefly with vessels flying the British flag. Since the war he has turned his attention more to American vessels. His words and deeds both bear eloquent testimony to his ambition for the development of the American merchant marine to its old-time eminence. He has risked his fortune in blazing the way to distant ports, leaving other American ship owners to hug the shores or trade with the nearby West Indies and Caribbean points. He has never asked for a Government subsidy, protective duties, preferential railroad rates or other forms of artificial assistance."

Another discovery tending to prove that the Chinese once lived in Mexico and Central America recently received considerable comment in the American press. According to a correspondent writing from Mexico City, a jade amulet recently was found in the ruins of the famous San Juan de Teotihuacan pyramids, not far from Mexico City. The trinket was unearthed near the so-called "Moon" pyramid, and when separated from its clay covering, was found to be a piece of fine jade about twenty centimeters in circumference and some half a centimeter thick. Noticing that there were peculiar inscriptions on the ornament, the finder took it to the National Museum and a translator found the inscriptions to be in the Chinese language and to read, "The Moon risen amongst the clouds" and beneath this, "The golden fish that passes by the Dragon's gate is converted into a Dragon." On the reverse was the sentence, "The night moon shines through the pines—Good Fortune." While there have been many indications that members of the Chinese race once lived on the American Continent, about all of the evidence which scientists have had to work on outside of pieces of ancient pottery containing ornaments similar to ancient Chinese designs was a document dating around the year 500 A. D., from which it is presumed that a number of Chinese priests visited Mexico and remained there for about three years preaching Buddhism and doing missionary work. Scientists have long claimed that the native Indians of Mexico have many customs which resemble some of the ancient Buddhist rites while others are so bold now as to assert that the American Indian had his origin in Asia and that he migrated to America in early times when the two continents were connected where Bering Strait now is. There is no question of certain physical similarities between the North American Indians and Northern Chinese while in Alaska, there is very little difference between the Esquimaux of the American Continent and the Giliak Indian on the Siberian side of the Straits.

Mr. Tong Shao-yi, former Premier and veteran political leader of China in both the North and the South, is on the right track when he calls attention to the fact that to the millions of victims from the floods in North China last summer, there must now be added the millions of victims of the present war in the Shanghai area. In a telegram addressed to the Cabinet and departmental ministers in Peking yesterday, Mr. Tong, in association with a number of other public-spirited Chinese, called attention to the fact that when this war ends there will be many millions of people in Kiangsu and Chekiang provinces who will be in actual distress. First will be the thousands of soldiers who have been wounded, many of them so seriously that they will be forced into the beggar class, unless assistance is rendered that may fit them for useful work such as was done in every country of Europe and in America after the close of the European War. Mr. Tong estimates that the surtax recently levied upon the Customs receipts will amount to approximately $8,000,000 and that Peking should at once set aside half of this money for local relief of war victims. We rather think that Mr. Tong has over-estimated the amount, for if the war keeps up for much longer, the Customs receipts are bound to fall because of the decrease in foreign commerce, but he is on the right line in calling attention to the fact that the present war is bound to bring in its wake another famine problem to this sorely distressed land. The Committee in Peking having in charge the drive for famine funds estimates that at least $20,000,000 will be needed. If this war lasts another two months, as seems possible, in the North at least, the amount of money required for relief purposes in China will probably be double or treble that required for famine relief from the recent floods in North China. Just where this money is to come from is hard to say. Chinese merchants, squeezed to the last penny by the militarists for war funds, will not have much left for charity, excepting, of course, in the treaty ports, where the militarists can not reach them. The final result will be that China will be forced to go abroad for this money, and this means to the United States and Great Britain chiefly for these are the only countries in a position to help at this time. Japan, just beginning to recover from the devastating earthquake and still in the midst of a business depression, will not be able to do much. The magnitude of the relief work which will face China and the world at the close of the present war will quite likely surpass anything which this country has ever experienced. We realize that this is a strong statement, for China has always been the victim of frequently recurring famines from one cause or another. At the time of the last famine in 1920-21, a considerable step forward was made in the business management of famine relief work, but there has been a tendency since that time for the famine relief organizations to split up and declare their independence in pretty much the same way as the political units in the provinces. For this reason there is need now for those interested in relief measures to begin to take stock of the situation and prepare for the monumental work which will face China and the world when this present civil war ends. The tremendousness of the relief measures required in Europe during and at the close of the World War made it necessary to place the whole business on an efficient footing and to appoint a strong executive at the head. Mr. Herbert Hoover was the man selected for this great job, and China will require the services of a man similar in character and executive ability for the problem which will face this country this winter.

Excerpts From Great Writers

By Mathy

COMMON SENSE

Common sense is the sense, or wisdom, which the mind absorbs from all the common and ordinary things of life. It is more reliable than any wisdom drawn from uncommon things. For what keeps happening has more of the juice of the universe in it than the thing that happens once in a while. Most things that are plain, and that we know thoroughly, are those things that we have observed over and over again; as a mysterious event, or a miracle, is simply something that happens only once. If there were a volcanic eruption every day at 6 a.m., we should pay no more attention to it than to a sunrise. Common Sense is very complex, and unconscious of itself. "Book learning," and all expert and professional and unusual knowledge, is simple, and understands itself perfectly. Hence the so-called learned men, and those who have mastered some craft, are as a rule quite sure they know something. The shrewd student of life, the man who, like Lincoln, has his force in the Common Sense he has amassed, is, on the contrary, inclined to doubt if he knows anything. By and by, in the course of centuries, even if not of years, or months, Common Sense become the judge and jury of every science, every religion, every art, every government. No system or institution will stand unless it will adjust itself to the slow, silent, merciless criticism of Common Sense.

Is Anything The Matter With The Sun?

BY GARRETT T. SERVISS

If recent special, and very capable, studies had not shown that the sun has, during the past few years, fluctuated noticeably in its output of radiation the meteorological vagaries of the year 1924 might have seemed less significant than they now do of the close dependence of our earth upon the changing moods of its solar master. Formerly nobody except astronomers felt a lively interest in variable stars. Algol with its demon winking, almost closing its staring eye every second or third night, only to open it wide again within a few hours; or Mira Ceti, "the wonder in the Whale," blazing up portentously every nine months and then sinking clear out of sight, far below the level of any but telescopic vision might attract amateurs, but the general public never knew much more of them than their names.

But now that we have found out that our own sun is a variable star, and one whose variations are sufficiently great to produce easily measurable, as well as disagreeably felt, changes and caprices of temperature on this little planet, the subject of stellar variation assumes a personal interest for everybody. The steadfastness of the sun has usually been taken for granted, and it has been held up as a typical example of faithful and never failing performance of duty. The only trouble with that idea is that it never had any other foundation than human egotism.

We easily persuaded ourselves that that the sun was put in the sky to give light and heat to the inhabitants of the earth, whereas in fact the existence of the earth is an insignificant incident in the history of the sun like the circling of a dazzled insect around an arc light.

How great may be the maximum variation of which the sun is capable we do not know. But even the four, five, or six per cent of temporary loss which its radiation has shown, as compared with its general average, has been sufficient to upset the seasons in some places to an uncomfortable degree, to say the least. A considerably greater failure would unquestionably have disastrous results. Is there, then any reason to expect an increase in the sun's variability?

Perhaps not, but at the same time it may be significant with reference to this question that the geological history of the earth speaks of times in the remote past when things happened that might well have been the result, in some cases of a great increase in the sun's radiation, and in other cases of a similarly great decrease.

The real cause of the great ice ages, with their intervening periods of high temperature, has never been unveiled—at least not to everybody's satisfaction. Neither is the reason known why, during a long past age, the polar regions of the earth were the scene of almost tropical life where now only continents and sea roofs ice and eternal snow exist.

If we did not see in the heavens around us some very conspicuous examples of stars, for greater than our sun, but resembling it in constitution, which vary sometimes very irregularly, and often enormously, in the amount of their radiation, we might not be willing to think that such a thing could happen with him; but with these instances before our eyes, considered together with the now established fact that he actually does vary irregularly, though but to a small extent, we can hardly shut out the consideration that at times these variations may attain a calamitous magnitude.

As far as we yet know, man began his career on the earth in the latest ice age, so that, if that strange geological event was actually due to a change of solar radiation, human history has not been long enough to cover a return swing of the pendulum.

The present studies of the sun's radiation constitute, perhaps, the most important work that astronomers have ever undertaken.

Mrs. Edith Igoe Sweeney Going To Indo-China To Select Art-Trade Exhibit

American Woman Is Given Governmental Commission To Further Travel And Trade To French Colony In South; Is Authority On Orient

BY IRENE CORBALLY KUHN
When France, noted for its fine taste and discrimination, commissions an American woman to travel to 12 colonies in Indo-China and select representative examples of the arts and industries of those provinces which in her judgment and experience are likely to prove of educational value in furthering travel to and trade with those provinces, one may be sure that the woman is exceptional.

Mr. Edith Igoe Sweeney, of San Francisco, a recognized authority on art, a student of the Orient, a theatrical director of no mean ability, and above all, a lover of beauty, merits the distinction given her by the French government and is a worthy trustee of the responsibility vested in her.

A native San Franciscan, born into a family of journalists and artists, and the wife of an artist, Mrs. Sweeney has been a gipsy traveller all her life. She has travelled up and down the world in an endless quest for beauty and has sought untrillingly to bring back to her home in San Francisco the most perfect examples of the art of every land she has visited. Her search being sincerely inspired by a love of the unusual and free from the taint of commercial enterprise, she has succeeded so well that her private collection in San Francisco has excited the wonder and admiration of all who have seen it. Among these was M. Gaston Girard, commercial attaché for Indo-China in America. M. Girard saw Mrs. Sweeney's collection, listened to Mrs. Sweeney's ideas and ambitions for the propagation of the faith in beauty and the dissemination of culture through bringing home to non-travellers the best of the countries of the world, and he became Mrs. Sweeney's friend. There followed his suggestion that Mrs. Sweeney go to the French Colonies in the Far East, tour Tonkin, Annam and Cambodia, and by a judicious selection of articles of beauty and usefulness, introduce to America and Europe that much neglected virgin paradise of the Orient.

WERE THERE BEFORE

Mrs. Sweeney has penetrated Indo-China before this and comes on this quest with the enthusiasm of a collector snatched from treasures too quickly and then suddenly given an opportunity to return to the treasure-trove. For that is exactly what happened. The Sweeneys, Mrs. Edith and Dan, who is an artist of no mean ability and a writer well-known on the Pacific Coast of America, toured the world on a rather hasty trip three years ago. Their plans prevented them from spending as much time as they would have wished in Indo-China, Siam and Java which, in making up their itinerary, they then neglected for other better-known points in the Orient. Their regret for the past three years, after having glimpsed the wonders of that part of the Orient, was that they had to leave it so soon; and Mrs. Sweeney's delight at returning with carte blanche to explore the country in a diligent search for its rarest art secrets is unfounded.

Mrs. Sweeney's plans are to bring back a goodly portion of Indo-Chinese art, including pottery, fabrics, metals and paintings to America where they will be exhibited under the auspices of the French Government in San Francisco, New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, some city in the south, undoubtedly, and eventually, in a permanent museum in Paris. Mrs. Sweeney's dream for the permanent exhibition is a temple in some beauty spot of Paris which will reflect truly the spirit of Indo-China. During their four in the colonies the

American Woman Here On Mission To Indo-China

Above, Mrs. Edith Igoe Sweeney with M. Gaston Girard, commercial attaché for Indo-China in America, who commissioned her to travel to the French colonies in the Orient and bring back representative examples of their arts and industries for exhibition in America and Europe; at left, Mrs. Sweeney with the emblematic key to the French colonies in Indo-China with which she was presented before leaving America with instructions "to open Indo-China to the world and throw the key away, leaving the door of the country open forevermore."

tery, fabrics, metals and paintings to America where they will be exhibited under the auspices of the French Government in San Francisco, New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, some city in the south, undoubtedly, and eventually, in a permanent museum in Paris. Mrs. Sweeney's dream for the permanent exhibition is a temple in some beauty spot of Paris which will reflect truly the spirit of Indo-China. During their four in the colonies the Sweeney's will visit the Great Fair in Hanoi, Tonkin Province, from November 30th to December 14th. It is at this Fair that she hopes to find her most wonderful things and it is there too, that she is looking especially for objects made of the rare alloy, unknown in Europe and America, but in common use in Tonkin, an alloy of silver and bronze with traced designs of pure silver on the background.

A SNICER CONNOISSEUR

It is doubtful, after hearing Mrs. Sweeney talk, modestly but with a full consciousness of her own gifts and an abiding belief in the good results sure to accrue from the splendid thing she is doing, if France could have found a better emissary or connoisseur. In the first place, Mrs. Sweeney is an artist; in the second place, she has a genius for beauty, these, coupled with her expert knowledge, enthusiasm and good judgment, should assure her success in her undertaking. Best of all, she is an old-fashioned "new woman" who believes and practices the interesting theory that husband, child, home and career can be and should be indissolubly bound up for the best good of all.

In San Francisco Mrs. Sweeney has contributed greatly to the encouragement of character building among growing girls. Unlike most women who have children of their own, growing up, she does not flail the fapper. Rather does she regret that the modern mothers should take so little interest in their children that there should be cause for criticism of the younger generation.

"If a young girl is bold and forward, addicted to cigarettes, cocktails and petting parties," said Mrs. Sweeney, "it is primarily the fault of the parents, particularly the mother, for failing to provide the girl with congenial home surroundings. When the home is the center of daily life instead of a stopping-off place between parties and movies and the hectic pursuit of modern fads, there is not the same urge in the young girl to seek amusement outside. The training of a young girl should begin when she is a baby and should never be relaxed throughout her life until she is of mature age when she will be equipped with a knowledge of life that prohibits all fear of it.

ORIENT AS TEACHER

"The women of the Occident could learn much from the women of the Orient," said Mrs. Sweeney, "if only in the patient care and training of their children which is discernible, for instance, in the homes of the better class of Chinese."

The great dream of Mrs. Sweeney's life, and one that will undoubtedly be realized ere long for she has the faculty of catching up responses to her vibrant personality and transmuting them into tangible realities, is the establishment of a great world-school-club. In the rolling hills of California across the bay from San Francisco is a gracious hollow where the green land rolls back on either side like sea-green water from the prow of a ship. Here in this hollow Mrs. Sweeney has envisioned a natural amphitheater and around this hollow she has builded a dream of a great educational institute which shall offer recreational and scholastic advantages to the young women from all lands—a veritable international institute.

"What greater good could come to the young girls of America than to mingle freely and intimately with girls from China, Japan, India, Siam, France, England, Italy, everywhere? Nations are much the same as individuals as a traveller usually discovers, and prejudices vanish when one has had an opportunity to meet and know all peoples and races in their home countries. In this school I hope to have an institution which shall be a great club where girls who are worthy, who have the talents and potentialities of great women but lack the opportunity to develop, may come and learn and play. I can conceive of no greater education than the natured education which would ensue from the meeting of girls of all nations, the exchange of opinions and the disappearance of prejudices and caste lines with the development of international friendships."

A DREAM SCHOOL

In this institution Mrs. Sweeney hopes to have art and literary treasures, perfect examples of the best of all lands, so that, following the ideas of the great educator and poet Rabindranath Tagore, the young mind can absorb beauty and culture naturally by constant association.

As an example of the sort of cultural education with which Mrs. Sweeney is anxious to surround the girls in her school she went unerringly to one of the most priceless objects in the collection of E. A. Strelnieck in Shanghai. Mrs. Sweeney visited Mr. Strelnieck's galleries in Ningpo road and in browsing around among his treasures came upon an old manuscript containing twenty-four small Chinese paintings of exquisite workmanship, illustrating a forgotten poetical romance in Chinese history. The characters written in the book are miniature paintings in themselves, so delicately and perfectly done are they.

"That," said Mrs. Sweeney, "is what I should like to have in my dream school where hundreds and thousands of girls could benefit from such a treasure which will eventually find its way, no doubt, into a private collection."

Mr. and Mrs. Sweeney are hoping to be able to go North to revisit Peking, Mukden and Korea before setting out on their voyage to Indo-China.

Esperanto On The Air

I read in a French journal: "The daily extending range of radiophonic transmissions, which already reach to the antipodes, and traverse dozens of countries speaking different language, renders more and more necessary the adoption of an auxiliary language, having a restricted vocabulary, and a very simple grammar which can be understood by all."

The writer goes on to say that "Esperanto" is just the language needed for this purpose, and affirms "the most eminent members of our (the French) Academy of Sciences demand the adoption" of that salamagundi of hashed-up words—"for science."

On looking at the list given of these eminent persons, however, I do not find that it is either long or typical of the best fame of the French Academy of Sciences, and I doubt whether the majority of the leading members of that distinguished body would commend the choice attributed to a few of them. It is characteristic, I believe, of French men of science that they are lovers, and very good masters of their native language and that they especially appreciate its exceptional clearness as a medium for the conveyance of the facts, laws and ideas of science.

To be sure, the proposal is not to use Esperanto for French science at home, but only for spreading its fruits abroad. But if foreign students learn French for its literature and for use in business, travel and personal intercourse, why should they learn, in addition, an uncouth, artificial language solely in order to study French science? It would be impossible for such a farrago of a language to reproduce with accuracy the ideas of the original thinker and experimenter, for nobody can think in a sham language. Every time you translate from one tongue into another you lose something, and often something essential to the meaning, if you make up a language from mixed-up pieces of other (real) languages.

ages, keeping down the new vocabulary to a restricted number of words, and machining its "grammar" until it is as "unaccidental" as a skating floor, you have only produced fetters for thought. You are offering a poor and scanty in place of a rich and abundant medium for the exchange of ideas. You give lead for gold.

If, as is distinctly stated, the idea is only to use Esperanto for diffusing scientific information over the world, it would be a waste of time. The scientists already have their common language, easily translatable into every leading tongue of the world. Says the writer whom I quoted at the beginning:

"It goes without saying that this practical idiom (he means Esperanto—"idiom" forsooth!) cannot affect pre-eminence of French as the language of diplomacy, of literature, of art, the language of high culture in the whole world. That is a privilege which it owes to its precision, its clearness, its elegance, and still more to the art and the incomparable literature of which it is the bearer.

"Neither will Esperanto interfere with the contests in diverse tongues, like those which have just been inaugurated in America by Miss Edith Bennet, in English, in Italian, and in French, and which have been heard by five million auditors."

Very good; but then, I say again, what is the use of putting an artificial language on the air for the sole purpose of transmitting scientific information? The scientific centers are not calling for it. Scientists do not want it. I do not believe there is one living who would take the trouble to learn this patched-up, strictly limited, stiff-jointed "language," only in order to hear its uncouth words trying to tell him what his brother scientists were doing and thinking on the other side of the ocean. He would much rather learn two or three real languages, which could reward his efforts with the rich products of literary and artistic genius in addition to giving him, in all its shades of meaning, the ripe result of science.

Finest Train in all America

JUNE first, the Great Northern Railway presented to the travelling public a new creation in Railway Train Architecture, the masterpiece of Pullman construction, an all-new Steel Train without precedent or parallel in equipment and luxuriousness—the New Oriental Limited to Chicago and Eastern Cities.

— Overland to Chicago —

The route is via Glacier National Park, crossing the Rocky and Cascade ranges. The New Oriental Limited will cover the 2,206 miles between Seattle and Chicago (without change)—in 70 hours. Direct connections are made at Chicago for all points east.

Telephones: North 651 and North 1717

We have been carrying on our business for more than thirty years and have been enjoying the confidence and commendation of the public. We are selling the coals of the best Chinese coal mines, such as, Dah Doong Coal, Ching Hsing Coal, Chung Hsing Coal, Tung Woo Coal, Houchi Coal, Liu Ho Kow Coal as well as Saghaline Coal. The Shanghai-Hangchow-Ningpo Railway, Compagnie des Messageries Maritimes, and Italian, American, French and Chinese Warships, Cotton Mills and other industrial factories have been purchasing great quantities of coal from us, and our annual sale amounts to over 200,000 tons.

Our coal is best selected and at moderate prices, and consumers may rely on us in obtaining the right kind of coal as named on their order. We are well versed in the qualities of the various coals suitable for different boilers.

Orders from foreign warships are especially welcome. It is understood that warships used to purchase coal from the merchants who are not belonging to the coal trade and who obtain their coal after passing many hands. These merchants do not understand what is the right coal for warships, who are liable to be cheated by these merchants. Such practices bring serious damage to the names of our Chinese coal mines.

We are doing business on thoroughly honest basis in a measure to preserve the name of our Chinese coals as well as to push our business. We guarantee the satisfaction of foreign steamships who may place orders with us. Sufficient stock of the coals is always available to meet our customers' demands, either for temporary order or for yearly contract. Please write or telephone us and our representative will call on you.

"Ma" Ferguson's Plan To Oust The Klan

Declares She Will Be Her Own Boss As Governor Of Texas; Husband To Help

The first woman selected to be Governor of one of the United States plans to be the Chief Executive of Texas in fact as well as in name. She made her campaign a fight against the Ku Klux Klan and she purposes to carry on that fight when she takes office.

Two thousand miles away the success of Mrs. Miriam Amanda Ferguson in the gubernatorial primary seemed to be a dubious gain for woman in politics. Her opponents charged, and the statement seemed credible, that behind "Ma" Ferguson's skirts hid the disfigured figure of Jim Ferguson, a former Governor, who had been impeached on charges affecting his personal honesty. Jim Ferguson is the husband of "Ma" Ferguson.

An interview with Mrs. Ferguson by a member of the staff of The New York Times and a visit to her home afford evidence that the first woman Governor has been underestimated. Her success in the primary—the formal election is still to come, but in Texas the Democratic nomination is ordinarily equivalent to election—is attributable to the Klan struggle, and she was aided by her husband, a skillful politician; but time and chance also favor male candidates. The important fact is that Mrs. Miriam Amanda Ferguson declares her intention to administer the office for which she has been designated, and asserts that her views and her policies are her own. In important matters they diverge from those with which her husband has been identified.

Mrs. Ferguson is not embarrassed by the allegation that her husband and not herself will be the Chief Executive of Texas on Jan. 1. At her home in Temple, in the presence of former Governor Ferguson, she was told:

"It has been published from one end of Texas to the other that you will only be a figurehead and that your husband will be the real Governor."

WILL BE GOVERNOR, SHE SAYS

"Yes I know all about that," Mrs. Ferguson replied. "Of course, I shall consult my husband and I shall also consult some of the other able men who have so loyally supported me in my battle for the nomination. 'Jim,' I mean my husband, has been painted in all the colors of the rainbow, but I know him better than any other person, and I know that he is honest and that no man was ever more misjudged. He is my husband, and trusting him as I do I would be foolish not to seek his advice when necessary. But after all is said and done, the fact remains that I am to be the Governor and I shall be Governor in every sense of the word."

Mr. Ferguson laughed heartily when the question was raised over the Klan's assertion that he would be the real Governor, and when Mrs. Ferguson had spoken for herself, he added: "Now that you have met and talked with my wife, I guess you have no doubt as to who will be the Governor. As for me, I shall be the handy man about the house. I will cut the wood and bring in the water."

"Oh, no," Mrs. Ferguson broke in. "you are going to do everything you can to help me, just as are all my other good friends."

Yet in appearance and in her background Mrs. Ferguson is the housewife and the gentlewoman rather than the politician. Her home is at Temple, a city of about 10,000 people in the geographical center of the State. The late Joseph Wallace, Mrs. Ferguson's father, was a leading citizen of Temple County, and the title to the farm, which was his home, now stands in the name of his daughter.

FAMILIAR WITH PUBLIC AFFAIRS

She was born and reared in a home of culture, and the charge that she is a woman lacking in education and in familiarity with public affairs is obviously untrue. Her friends describe her as one of the able women of the State, and it is only necessary to talk to her to realize that she is at home among the problems with which she will have to deal as Governor.

Mrs. Ferguson was still acknowledging the congratulations of friends and of strangers as well when she received The New York Times correspondent at her home in Temple. A slight woman of medium stature she must be in the early 40s. Her two daughters are grown and one of them is married, but until the present campaign they absorbed their mother's attention. The future Governor of the Lone Star State was as gay as a girl as she talked over her political victory. A stream of messenger boys brought in telegrams from all parts of the United States, and Mrs. Ferguson expressed wonder why everybody in the country seemed to be interested in the fortunes of "just an average Texas woman." She expressed frank pleasure in her election.

MRS. FERGUSON SWEEPS UP K. K. K.

Mrs. Miriam A. Ferguson, of Temple, Texas, has been nominated for the Democratic candidacy for Governor of Texas, practically equivalent to election, the first woman ever so honored in America. Mrs. Ferguson made the race to vindicate her husband, James E. Ferguson, who was impeached as Governor seven years ago on the charge of improper use of the State's money. He conducted her campaign and will virtually be Governor. She made her campaign a bitter fight against the Ku Klux Klan.

"Of course, I am delighted," she said. "If I was not I would not be human. But I think I know exactly the kind of task that is to be mine in the two years I will be Governor. I am not a bit nervous and I know I am going to make good; otherwise I would not have made the race. I do feel the weight of the burden I am to assume and that is why during the campaign I prayed God for guidance, and as Governor I shall continue to seek the guidance that can come only from Him."

Mrs. Ferguson was asked: "What in your opinion was the outstanding issue of the campaign. She replied without hesitation:

"The Ku Klux Klan."

"In your opinion, does the victory of the anti-Klan ticket mean the end of the Invisible Empire in Texas?"

"There is no question about what this victory means to Texas," the future Governor responded. "The result shows that the people of this great State of ours are through with the Klan domination, and I think we Texans know more about what this means than do the people of any other State in the Union. This victory is the voice of Texas declaring in tones no one can misunderstand that the Wizard and his henchmen shall not rule Texas."

WILL HELP DAVIS, SHE SAID

"Furthermore," declared Mrs. Ferguson, "I am convinced this great victory will prove of incalculable benefit to other States in which the Klan has gained a foothold, especially in these Southern States of ours."

"Do you think," she was asked, "it will help John W. Davis?"

"Of course it will," was the quick answer. "Before Texas spoke, the opposition, while taking advantage of Klan support in territory normally Republican, was using the Klan issue in Democratic States, especially Texas, as an argument in support of the Republican ticket. I guess they will have to shift their tactics now.

Indiana and Texas were the two star States of Klandom. Well, Texas is free but Indiana is still in the clutches, and the Klan in Indiana is Republican. Then, of course, there is Maine, and I might go still further; but what is the use. The country knows, and after all that is what counts."

Mrs. Ferguson said the Democratic candidate for President has no more enthusiastic supporter in the United States than she. She said that it was "just like Mr. Davis to speak his mind about the Klan before the election without waiting to see which way the victory went."

"John W. Davis," said Mrs. Ferguson, and she was deeply in earnest, "is one of the greatest men we have ever had. He is brave, and when he spoke at Seagirt he did a thing so courageous I can't help but believe it will mean his election. Of course, I am going to help in every way I can. You can rest assured that I will be found doing my 'very best bit' for Mr. Davis."

NOW SHE WOULD HIT THE KLAN

"What of the future of the Klan in Texas and what steps, if any, do you expect to take to make it impossible for the Klan again to menace the Government of Texas?" Mrs. Ferguson was asked.

"When I announced my candidacy for Governor," she answered, "I told the people of Texas that if a man is so narrow and so intolerant that he wants to believe in the principles of the Ku Klux, that is his right and his business. But when he covers up his face and goes out in disguise to whip and assault some woman or murder and maim some man, then that is mine and every other good citizen's business, and, therefore, I am in favor of a law that will punish by a term in the county jail any person over the age of 21 found in a public place with a mark on or in disguise, and where three or more persons over the age of 21 are found together in a private place with a mark or other disguise on, then I would give them one year in the pen."

Furthermore, I am in favor of putting any church property on the tax rolls at full value that is permitted to be used by parties in mask or disguise.

"I am in favor of a strict law

A Strong Criticism Of Monroe's Boxer Plan

Writer Says "Americans Are Crazy" If They Accept Educator's Scheme

The following criticism of Dr. Paul Monroe's contemplated plan for disposing of the balance, about $6,000,000 of the American share of the Chinese Boxer Indemnity has been handed to The China Press for publication by an American resident of China, who, for several years, has been closely connected with educational work in this country. Owing to his present position, he has asked that his name be withheld.

Once again a prominent American educator who has had practically no continuous contact with Chinese, aside from "Westernized students," takes a leading part in arrangements affecting American relations with China. This time it is, according to recent press interviews, Dr. Paul Monroe, unofficial expert advisor to the American and Chinese governments with regard to the expenditure of the Boxer indemnity funds. Those funds, it has been decided, are to be spent for educational and cultural purposes. The Board of Control has already been appointed and certain goals tentatively set—partly it must be presumed, with Dr. Monroe's endorsement. Probably a crucial comment of representative British—not imperialists but idealists—in China, "Are the Americans crazy?" puts tersely an attitude of mind with regard to these preliminary steps, that it may be worth while looking into.

Let us take up, first, two or three aspects of the control of the funds and, second, a couple of points as to constructive projects proposed.

In the first place, the Board put in control of the funds is to be two-thirds Chinese and one-third American and of the latter being resident in America (who have visited China but whose interpreters were almost entirely Western-returned students) and one of those resident in China is an employee of the Chinese Government. Moreover, at the place where supplies are purchased, where "number two" and lesser men employed, and where their salaries are paid, there are no stipulations as to foreign management and oversight of funds.

In other words virtual Chinese control. Now, to put it briefly, one need not go to the political regime of China to discover the dangers connected with Chinese control. One need not even go to the foreign commercial interests in China, who are under such suspicion by these "liberal" Western educators. Go to the missionaries, or the professional layman, Go to the Chinese themselves. No foreigner could make stronger statements than those made by a Chinese writer in the Chinese Social and Political Science Review of 1920 or '21 in regard to the prevailing squeeze, nepotism and inefficiency in the educational system of China. That article speaks for itself. There is no use repeating it here—it is an old story to the resident of China duplicated in all aspects of Chinese life. If the most candid of the Chinese who are in a position to know, would only speak out in that way, incidents enough could be supplied from higher institutions as well as lower to disillusion the idealistic trusting educators from the west. Some are so plain that even the ordinary blind foreigner detects them; as for example, such lack of discipline in higher institutions that students are passed in their subjects no matter how poor their work and marks have been. A claim of certain of these well-meaning gentlemen from home is that they personally "urged the students" to root out from their institutions these typical traits of squeeze, nepotism, and inefficiency, and that these young men "promised to do so," two or three years ago (!), and that therefore the situation surely "must have changed." Such is the ultra naïveté of the "homeside" American. Frankly speaking, such a claim is simply hooted by the old residents as an indication of his ignorance of the Asiatic. Since when does the Briton abandon his traditional sportsmanship over-night? Since when does the Armenian rid himself of his keen business sense at the resolve to be generous? And since when can the Chinese in his native environment get away so easily from that loyalty and submission to his relatives which he is at the basis of nepotism; or from the custom of flexible unstipulated commissions by each man able to exact them; or from the drag of inefficiency and the odium for persistent standards of efficiency? The man who lives in China day after day does not have to read such classic sociological studies as Sumner's Folkways to realize the enormous inertia to be overcome in a departure from social custom; he sees it day by day for five, ten, twenty years. And he expects leading educators in the West who take a hand in American-Chinese relations, to realize it. If they are not ready to come and absorb it during prolonged first-hand contact with the unvarnished rank and file of the civilization as it is, they should at least make such armchair study of comparative cultures and of the process of social change as will make them realize it. To be unaware of the scope of squeeze, nepotism, and inefficiency in Chinese civilization, from the Western viewpoint, or to expect its eradication in any real Chinese group integrated with the rest of Chinese life, in any short time, is inexcusable in men with responsibility for Sino-Western negotiations. Yet, such is the implication of turning the Boxer indemnity funds over to Chinese control.

Dr. Monroe would probably reply to this with his reported statement that, even if all this were true, the Boxer indemnity is "China's money." Let us examine this claim also. If this is "China's money" and there are really "no strings attached," what of the stipulation that it must be spent for "educational and cultural purposes" only? What is that if not a denial that it is "China's money" in the sense that the Chinese may dispose of it as they will—a "string" of some consequence? There is no consistency here, even of such equivocation does "ease the consciences of the professional educator or cultural specialist. And the Chinese realize it. As evidence, note those Chinese who protest against present suggestions for using the fund, and assert that if this is actually China's money, there should be no stipulation by foreigners against its being used for railroad, industrial, engineering or other such projects. These Chinese are entirely justified. America's stipulation, and her virtually requiring China's appointment of foreign administrators—if it were not a kah chi ("polite") appointment of only five members, two of whom reside in America—are absolutely inconsistent with the assertion that it is "China's money" without strings. And we all know that no nation in a position of power would be told what to do with money that was its own. Moreover those who know the rank and file of the Chinese are quite confident that the only reason that Chinese representatives acceded to these conditions is that they thought they would be more likely to get it if these conditions were made. Or, because educators happened to be nearer the official ear than industrialists, or because it would give them more prestige in the eyes of America and other powers likely to return the indemnity (Great Britain, for instance), or some such practical "disinterested" reasons. If it is "China's money," then let it be handed over to China—that means, of course, China's official representatives—without any strings whatsoever, and if they wish to spend it for industrial or military purposes—even for continuing the present state of war—that is their business!

Of course, the American representatives and expert advisors "hedge" at this point! And here is a third claim that warrants scrutiny. They want to be sure, say they, that the "Chinese people" get "value received." Commendable indeed! Incidentally, note that this means, unequivocally, "strings" on the money! Yet note also the peculiar fact that they do not insist on enough "strings" to make it certain that the "Chinese people" will get "value received." If they want the Chinese people to get "value received," it does not take a specialist in the economists' theory or "value" to point out the strangeness of insisting on handing over dollars, coin, bank notes. Is it possible that the American negotia-

Mars Sails By America Coldly Without A Word

No Message Comes From The Planet, Ruddy Glowing As It Nears The Earth; Polar Snow Visible

Yerkes Observatory, Williams Bay, Wis., August 24.—Seen through the largest refracting telescope in the world, here, the planet Mars looked like a small orange with a patch of mold on it shortly after midnight this morning. The swashbuckling planet was closer to earth than it has been for 120 years—34,637,000 miles. And it will be almost 120 years again before it dips once more into such close view.

Luckily, atmospheric conditions were almost perfect for observation early this morning. The sky above Lake Geneva was clear and splashed with stars. Mars itself shone in the south like a great burning diamond.

"This is the best night for observing Mars we have had in twenty-four years," said Engineer Frank R. Sullivan of the observatory, which is a part of the University of Chicago. "Both satellites are clearly visible, an extremely rare bit of luck."

For Mars has its moons—two of them. They shone in the great lens like chips of star dust. They play tag with their father planet with such dizzy speed that full moon, half moon and crescent moon—two each—appear on Mars in the space of an earthly twenty-four hours.

The smallest one, known as "Deimos," is only twelve miles in diameter; the other, called "Phobos," about twenty. "Phobos," about 12,000 miles from the edge of Mars, traverses its tiny orbit once every seven hours.

Professor Edwin D. Frost, director of the observatory, said that a third moon might possibly be discovered. Most of the night his first assistant, Professor George Van Biesbroeck, kept his eyes glued to the lens searching the heavens some 35,000,000 miles away, but the third satellite didn't appear. Excellent photographs were taken of the satellites. For a month Professor Frost is to direct nightly observations.

The tube of the Yerkes telescope weighs six tons. It is sixty-two feet long and it is so delicately balanced that a baby's hand could swing it around. The dome was dark. With Professor Frost and Professor Van Biesbroeck were Engineer Sullivan, Professor Storrs Barrett, Professor W. H. Garrett, a few invited friends and newspaper men.

Professor Van Biesbroeck was crouched before the lens, jotting down notes, alert on his target 35,000,000 miles away. To his eye Mars looked like a ruddy silver dollar or an orange. "At one tip was a spot of tarish."

"A snow field," explained Professor Frost.

MARTIAN SEASONS LIKE OURS

It appeared as he talked that the polar regions at this time of the year are covered with a great peninsula of ice.

"It looks like the North Pole," said Professor Frost. "Really, however, it's the southern extremity. The lens inverts the image."

Then there were the tiny moons of Mars chasing each other around their glowing father.

Professor Frost presently told his audience a few things about Mars.

"I hate to disappoint you," he smiled, "but really I expect nothing of consequence to come of this observation. I am, though, interested in the possibility of a new satellite and its discovery."

He said that it was entirely within the range of possibility that life of some nature might exist on the neighboring planet. "This by no means indicates," he explained, "that I think there is intelligent human life on Mars. Far from it. But I do believe it entirely possible that some sort of primitive vegetable life does exist."

He scouted as absolutely ridiculous any possibility of intercommunication between the planets by means of radio or other devices. And he declared that the so-called canals, which were not visible to the untrained eye during the observation, were not "canals" in the usual sense, but "channels" often twenty miles wide and thousands of miles long.

The red coloring of Mars, said Professor Frost, comes not from forest or vegetable matter, but most likely from red sand, ferrous salt or ground up jasper. The canals, he said, are very possibly vegetable in origin.

CLOUDS OBSCURE THE VIEW

Washington, August 23.—Martians kept themselves effectively concealed from the eyes and ears of Washington observers last night, affording watchers neither a glimpse nor a murmur of anything unusual.

No one in this city could be found this afternoon who pretended to have distinguished any odd sounds different from the Summer course of static.

At both the Naval and Georgetown University Observatories, scientists were eagerly gazing at the red planet. Father John Gippich of Georgetown concentrating on the polar cap, and Dr. Asaph Hall at the Government institution, on the two satellites of Mars, which his father discovered. Father Gippich stated today that he saw nothing new about Mars, although a vigil was kept from 10 p.m. until 1 a.m.

Cloudy weather made observation unsatisfactory and the star was not clearly defined.

STUDY VEGETATION ON PLANET

had ignored the meritorious efforts to obtain communication. In these days of progress, he pointed out, nothing was beyond the range of possibility.

The planet was observed for a few minutes at the Greenwich Observatory last night, but observation conditions were not good. The south polar cap and some other markings were visible, but nothing unusual was seen.

Vancouver, B. C., August 23.—The combination of four dashes heard by wireless stations in this vicinity each morning for the last four weeks are not mysterious messages from Mars, according to an explanatory statement issued by E. J. Haughton, Superintendent of the Dominion Government wireless service. The signals are merely those sent from United States radio beacons on a new type of transmitter, said the statement.

Paris, August 23.—English as she is spoken and sometimes written led some of the most learned of the French newspapers today into the dissemination of an unanticipated bit of news. It also led some papers, what they presumed to be vegetative growth on the planet.

A dark spot known as Solis Lacus, said the astronomer, appearing almost in the center of the planet as viewed from here last night, has become considerably darker than when it was seen a month ago.

"This is the season of the most interesting development," said Earl Sipher, brother of Dr. V. M. Sipher, Director of the observatory. "On Mars the weather at this time of the year would correspond with late May in this climate. As the region we are studying appears to us each evening, we find its markings becoming darker and darker."

"No telescope yet conceived could possibly reveal the largest structure mankind could build on Mars: A great metropolis would be invisible even under a telescope at 34,000,000 miles."

STRANGE SIGNALS NOT FROM MARS

London, August 23 (Associated Press).—Professor A. M. Low, who was among those present at Dulwich at 1 o'clock this morning when strange and unidentified signals were received on a twenty-four tube radio set, does not believe they came from Mars.

"I think it must have been a combination of atmospheric and heterodyning—that is, interference between various stations," he said.

He added that he had not expected that messages would be received from Mars, but that he would be ashamed of himself if he which include the most dignified journals of Paris, to give valuable space to editorial expatriation on the possible significance behind the spoken word in question.

The spoken word "zipp" described the sound of the last of four mysterious dashes picked up yesterday by a Canadian radio station and thought for a time to be possible signals from Mars. The ingenious young operator at this end of the cable, never having heard the word zipp, but being familiar with the French word which might be written "zopp" exercised poetic license.

As a result the French press was informed that the Point Grey station in British Columbia had picked up the word "zopp," and throughout the day the French press informed the public of the possible communication from Mars and hazarded weird guesses as to the possible meaning of the strange Martian word might have in French, English, Japanese or any other translatable language.

Caterpillar Wheels On Tractors In Germany's Desolate Waste Lands

No piece of country in Europe, writes G. H. Morrison, can beat the moorlands in Germany for sheer desolation and lack of promise. One can hardly imagine anyone having the heart to try to make it grow anything marketable. The soil is soft, sandy and often boggy, covered for a large part with barren scrub or stunted timber. The undergrowth of horse is thick and tangled, and this is the kind of country the German government is trying to persuade people to attempt to cultivate, so as to increase Germany's supply of home-grown food and make the country less dependent on imported produce.

"Whatever do you call that queer-looking thing?" I could not help asking the German farmer I saw this week, pulling his five-furrow plough with a machine looking like nothing I had ever seen before. And yet it seemed strangely familiar. It strongly suggested the famous "tanks" our armies used with such effect against the Germans in Flanders. (As a matter of fact, that is where the Germans got the idea for making this new kind of tractor).

The farmer looked at me with bitter reproach in his eye as he answered dryly "That is the General Servant." This curt answer did not convey much information. But when I made it clear that even if the elephantine, ponderous-looking thing did strike one as amusing at first sight, nobody was trying to ridicule him, he softened enough to give an explanation.

"There isn't anything you can't do on a farm with that lady," he said. "She's specially made for work on this kind of country. You would think from her weight—I learned afterwards that the size he was using weighed three tons—that on soft soil like this she would sink so deep that she could never be got out again. A horse couldn't possibly pull a plough on this country. But these 'caterpillar wheels' as they call them, hardly sink at all."

CATERPILLAR WHEELS
It is as well to explain here what caterpillar wheels are. Anyone who saw our tanks in Flanders will remember the broad chain belting that was fixed round the rims of the wheels of the tanks. This belting was made in sections. The vast steel animal in moving along laid its own track before it, as it were, section by section. If this belting is taken off, and laid out flat on the ground, the wheels on the tractor, which one cannot see when the belting is on the machine, are all the time really running on steel rails, no matter what kind of country the tractor is passing over.

This enables a heavy vehicle to go over soft or sandy soil without sinking. The thin wheels of a heavy vehicle, drawn by horses, as we meet at times that she can also go backwards.

"A man with a little gumption can make the things do all kinds of work." He pointed to a windlass at the back of the machine. "By means of this rope, one can rig up a sack hoist in a few minutes. All one has to do is to sling the rope over the pulley above the hay-loft door and let the motor wind in. Nothing can beat it for putting sacks of produce or flour or bales of hay into the loft. And with the belt drive supplied when one buys the turn-out, one can run any kind of machine—chaff-cutter, thrasher, woodchaw, or water-pump. It is a simple matter to saw up old trees for firewood or cut out weather boards for building.

"She goes over any kind of land. It is as easy to plough a hill-side as a piece of level. The broad, flat caterpillar feet grip like claws. She goes over holes and ditches as if they weren't there. She works from morning till night and never gets tired. If you had tackled the job of trying to make this country grow stuff and had once tried it with horses you would not be so tickled because our 'General Servant' looks a bit awkward at first!"

DEVELOPMENT FROM TANK
It struck me that a machine like this would be the very thing for colonial farming, and determined to call on the maker. It turned out to be the work of one of the biggest machine factories in Germany. These machines, it appears, were first made about three years ago when the problem of growing more food in Germany was seriously taken in hand by the government and it became clear that many miles of absolutely barren country would have to be put under cultivation. The idea of using caterpillar wheels really had been suggested by the success of the tanks at the front. As is so usual nowadays in this country the enquiry as to whether after three years of experience, these new tractors had really proved practical, was answered by showing me a film of the tractor at work. It showed me in pictures everything the farmer had said the machine could do.

Obviously it was not possible all on one day to show the machine at work doing clearing, ploughing, harrowing, fertilising, grubbing, harvesting, threshing and chaff-cutting! But at the works it was shown that in the hands of a man with a little ingenuity it has many another useful application, such as for transporting heavy machine parts, shunting trucks, rolling asphalt or road-metal—things that would never occur to a farmer.

As a result of some technical questions, I was taken to the engineer's office. A dapper, clean-shaven, alert little man sitting in his shirt sleeves pouring over a number of drawings looked up as one entered.

I asked him engineer about fuel. "Fuel?" he said. "You can use benzine, benzol, gasoline, kerosene, naptha, crude oil—any liquid fuel you can get. The 25-Horse power 3 ton machine working at its maximum capacity uses about 2 gallons of benzol per hour. The 50-HP 6½ ton size uses about double. You must understand, of course, that the machine cannot be used to carry loads at all. It only pulls. It is simply a tractor. The motor is a 4-cylinder internal combustion with spark plug ignition and electric starter. The smaller size goes 850 revs. the larger, 900, not as a maximum but as a steady performance. Every part of the inside works can be reached easily from the sides so that it is easy to clean and easy to find any defect that arises. Every vital part is well protected from dust, dirt and water.

"Every part of the machine is numbered and the sizes standardised. Every single part can be ordered separately and the 'spares' are certain to fit exactly where they belong. The machine can turn in its own length and go through water up to a man's knee without suffering any damage.

"When one considers that such a machine can replace draft horses in every way, can work on land where horses are useless, costs nothing for upkeep when not working, seldom needs a repair, can be quickly put right by slipping in a 'spare', can be understood by any untrained person of average intelligence after about three weeks of schooling, can be used for hauling supplies over the worst roads in all kinds of weather—then the expenditure of a few hundreds of pounds is well worth it.

"After all, it is not much more than a team of good horses would cost."

Jewett Cars Win Annual Hill Climb At Syracuse

Repeating the performance at Albany two weeks before, two Jewett Specials won first and second in the Syracuse, N.Y., Automobile Club's third annual hill-climb, Saturday, July 26. Last year's record time of 1 minute, 31 4-5 seconds set by a Jewett was lowered to 1 minute, 22 2-5 seconds.

George Reynolds, driving the winning Jewett, won two first prizes, one in the piston displacement class event and the other for winning the free-for-all.

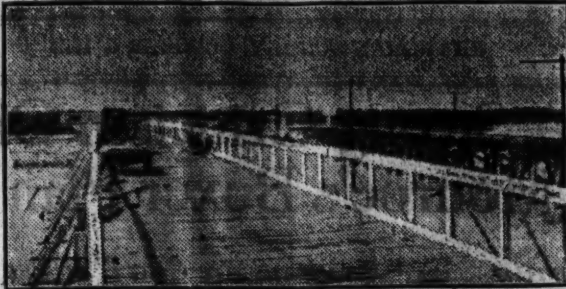

In the open race the Jewetts met five special hillclimbers. All were set to break the Jewett's grasp on the Automobile Club of Syracuse' Championship Cup. When won three times the cup will go to the Jewett as the champion hill-climber of the United States, according to the program of this event each year.

The next best time to the Jewett's was 1 minute, 26 4-5 seconds, made by a well-known eight-cylinder car.

A crowd estimated at between 10,000 and 15,000 persons witnessed this year's hill-climb. An entire troop of New York state Troopers, sent there by the state to handle the crowd, found it difficult to keep the people off the roadway up the steep hill.

The hill-climbing cars twisted and turned and shot straight up the mile and four-tenths hill as though it were a level stretch. The maximum grade of 10 percent was climbed at 75 miles per hour, according to Reynolds, the winning driver.

Wonderful Roadway Across Florida Keys

One of the most wonderful motor roads in the world will soon be completed, running from Key West across the Florida Keys to the mainland. The Dixie Highway, as the road is known, is 122 miles in length. The above cut shows a part of this remarkable roadway.

The Dixie Highway, the most phenomenal road in America, will pass over a chain of beautiful coral islets—the keys, across ocean lanes, through marvellously beautiful seascapes. I will almost parallel the Overseas Railway, which is still considered one of the most remarkable feats accomplished by American engineers. The engineering difficulties, of course, are tremendous.

The road will lead from the Florida mainland directly out across the Florida Key to Key West. Work has already been

Italian's Army's War Center Scene Of Race

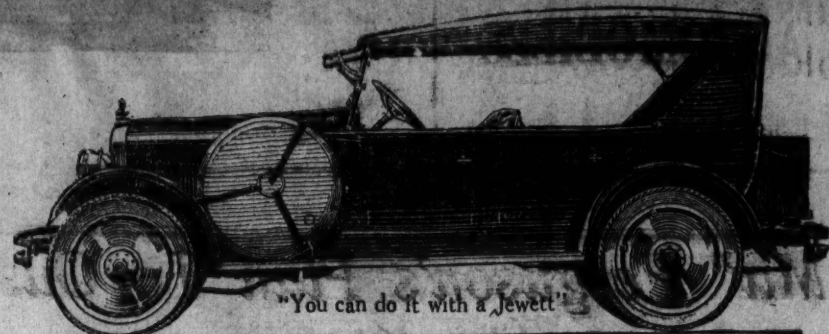

The suburbs of Udine, a frontier city which figured prominently during the war as the headquarters of the Italian army, has been the scene of a keen 287½ mile road race, the results of which were protested by some of the competitors and have only just been rendered official.

In the small car class the May Cup has been awarded to Madame Simonotti, driving a two-seater Amicar. In the second division, where competition was particularly keen, Leone Bastinelli on a Fiat 501 came home first and was followed by three O.M. cars driven respectively by De Pippi, Calligaro and Danieli.

The respective winners in the third, fourth and fifth classes were a Bianchi, driven by Ricchetti, a Lancia handled by Venturi, and an Alfa-Romeo with Pellizzo at the wheel.

JEWETT SPECIAL

A Thrifty Six Built by Paige

Gear Changing Rarely Necessary

THE Jewett Works wish to acquaint the motor car buyers with the mechanical construction of the Jewett.

The Jewett clutch is an engineering feat. Gear shifting on a Jewett is instant without pause and no clashing. The new Paige type clutch, no matter how fast you lift your foot, can neither stall the engine nor jerk the car. It engages and disengages smoothly and gently. The gear box is unusually silent and shifts as easily as the clutch. The powerful, flexible, six cylinder engine makes gear changing rarely necessary.

Easy steering is one of the most delightful features of Jewett performance. At each end of the Paige-Timken front axle are ball-bearing steering spindles that respond to the slightest touch on the wheel. The old tension and strain of a "stiff wheel" are forgotten. The frailest woman finds Jewett a pleasure to handle.

JEWETT SPECIFICATIONS:

Engine—6 cylinder, 3½ x 5; lubricated by high pressure oiling to main and connecting rod bearings; two unit electrical starting and lighting; thermostatically controlled; automatic spark advance; Paige-Timken axles; extra heavy 6 inch "I" beam steel frame; improved type four speed transmission; dry plate clutch; special alloy steel springs, 36" in front, 54" in rear; all steel universal joints; force-feed chassis lubrication.

Mars Sails By America Coldly Without A Word

the planet seemed to have been rearoused.
"Life seems quite as intense on Mars as on the earth," he said, "but it seems impossible for us to divine by what methods the two humanities will some day communicate with each other—doubtless by telepathic radiation."

Paris, August 23.—"When shall we get into communication with Mars?" echoed Camille Flammarion, French octogenarian astronomer, to a question put by the Petit Parisien.

"Why, perhaps the Martians already have tried at the epoch of the Iguanodon and the dinosaur and got tired. As to the luminous projections observed on Mars, are they signals or simply reflections of the sun on peaks? That mystery I would be as bold to affirm as unscientific to deny. Who knows if this year will settle the question?"

M. Flammarion has no doubt that there are inhabitants on Mars.

"The fact of their existence," he says, "is a natural conclusion from observations of their planet. By what miracle could the forces of nature, existing under identical conditions, be sterile there and productive here? Their world is astonishingly like ours."

"Certainly there is less water. There are no great oceans there, as here, but rather little seas—Mediterranean. The many spotted patches of dark green, no doubt are caused by vegetation and marshes, with long, floating weeds, like the famous Sargasso, in which the descendants of Columbus lost themselves. There are cool, rosy dawns, scorching noons and golden sunsets, as with us, but more serene harmony."

"The Martians are happier than we and, above all, much more intelligent. First, because their planet is several million years older than ours, and progress is a law; then because they are less governed by matter, the gravity there being less. A man or woman of 150 pounds would weigh only fifty on Mars."

"Besides, as the years are nearly twice as long, the Martian is only 50 when we are 94. Finally, the climate is more equable."

Sidewalk Savants See Mars For Dime

Credulous, Or Suspicious They Form Lines Eagerly At Curbstone Telescopes

Although Mars, in recent weeks, has enjoyed an amount of publicity that would arouse the envy of even the greatest theatrical press agent, none of this free advertising appears to have been commercialized. The only people, in fact, who seem to have benefited are those patient men who set up telescopes in public places and invite wayfarers to view the stars.

At ordinary times these appeals meet with a scant response, and the celestial showmen often call to the passing throngs in vain. But since Mars began to assume a top-of-the-column importance in the day's news, business in the star-gazing line, at 10 cents a gaze, has fairly boomed. At one of the uptown parks last night lines of men and women filed past two telescopes between 11 and midnight eager to view the ruddy planet.

"See the wonders of Mars," shouted one of the amateur astronomers. "Now is your chance to view the snowcaps and the great canals that are causing so much talk among the scientists. You'll never have such a chance again in your lifetime."

At these words the crowd pressed forward, and a burly, red-faced man, who led the line, peeped into the object glass. "Why, I don't see a darned thing," he exclaimed in disgust. The telescope man adjusted the focus and told him to look again. "Well," he said, after another peep, "either I'm drunk or Mars is drunk. It's dancing all over the place. I'll be more careful what brand of bootleg I tackle next time."

Even when it was explained to him that the earth and Mars were both traveling at terrific speed, which made the image in the glass somewhat frisky, he had some doubts about it. "No," he retorted, "it was that last ill' fizz. It's gone to my head."

SUSPICIOUS OF THIS MARS BUSINESS

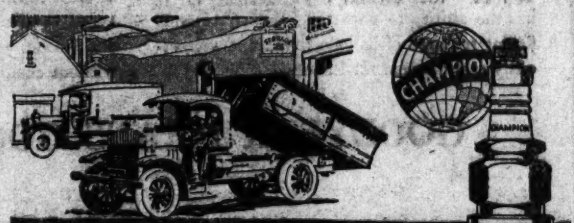

Next in the line was an elderly man, apparently from some rural district, perhaps in New Jersey. He seemed to be inspired by a Scottish degree of caution and sought for information before parting with his 10 cents. "Seems to me I've heard about this Mars," he remarked, "and some of the stories, I'll tell you, are mighty queer." Evidently he had suspicions of the planet.

At that moment, strangely enough, an airplane, brilliantly lighted, flew across the park and performed some stunts which drew the attention of the crowd in the street. "See here," said the Jerseyman, "what sort of a game is this, anyway? Ain't this Mars some kind of an advertising dodge connected with that air-ship?" Shining from an unclouded sky with unusual brilliancy, the planet certainly did bear a striking resemblance to an incandescent light.

The telescope man assured the doubter that the inhabitants of Mars were eons ahead of people on the earth plane, and that advertising had probably become a lost art up there. "Well, I always suspicion anything I hear in New York," said the man from across the river, "but I'll risk it this time."

After looking into the glass he made the same complaint as his predecessor concerning the planet's erratic behavior. "The blamed thing won't keep still a second," he exclaimed in disgust. "I can't see nothing."

"Why not stick a piece of glue on it," remarked an irreverent youth in the rear, and there was a roar of laughter, amid which the Jerseyman departed, thoroughly convinced that he had been stung once more.

Then a determined-looking woman who had evidently read all about Mars in the newspapers and was familiar with its planetary features, stepped up to the glass.

"Do you see the great snow caps and the canals?" asked the telescope man.

"When it quits jumping about I may," was the sneering reply. "At the present moment it looks to me like a minute imitation of a sun-kissed orange and not a very good one at that. Where are your snowcaps and canals? I'll defy you to find em."

SHE KNOW THERE WAS A CATCH

The telescope man volunteered the information that under the rays of the sun, then shining on Mars, the polar caps assumed a bright orange tint, and, furthermore, that much experience in star-gazing was necessary in order to detect the faint markings supposed to be canals.

"I know there would be some catch about it," commented the woman sharply as he paid her dime. "If that's all you can show, you're welcome to Mars as far as I'm concerned."

Others who followed expressed similar opinions and the reputation of Mars experienced what Wall Street terms a rapidly falling market. Everybody seemed to agree that the stories of snowcaps and canals were on a par with the great moon hoax which astonished our forefathers some generations ago.

There was a group of other watchers who did not pay ten cents for the privilege of viewing Mars. It was made up of four young Greeks and two Italians with a limited knowledge of English, who might have recently squeezed into the country through the meshes of the restrictive immigration law. They were seeking information from a young Jew of studious appearance. As he told them about the planet, its distance from the earth, and its possible inhabitants, it was clear that his audience remained sceptical. From their remarks they apparently regarded Mars as some clever American trick, the nature of which they could not exactly understand, but which was evidently designed to bring showers of dimes to the fortunate owners of telescopes.

"Mucha good money in dis Mars business," said one of the Greeks, as he regarded the increasing line of stargazers. Perhaps, with the business perception of his race, he will be found some evening at a New York street corner with a brand new telescope, and some highly original scheme for attracting public attention to the neighboring planets.

"Ma" Ferguson's Plan To Oust The Klan

requiring all secret or fraternal organizations to file the names of their membership in the County Clerk's office, to be kept in a bound volume open to public inspection; failure to file such names and the proper certificate therewith to be a misdemeanor, with a heavy fine and revocation of charter."

"When you are called on to appoint men or women to office will the fact that they have been members of the Klan or in sympathy with it govern your action?"

"It most certainly will. No Klansmen or Klanswomen will be appointed to office by me. As I go in, the Klan will go out. But I am not going into office with any thought of revenge or with hatred in my heart for any person. In the campaign I never once referred to my opponent in terms of disrespect, and, so far as I know, Judge Robertson pursued the same course toward me. Of course, Judge Robertson and my husband organized a sort of mutual admiration society, the proceedings of which were quite lively at times. But that was Jim's and not mine."

THINKS ISSUE IS DEAD

"Now I believe the Klan issue is dead in Texas and the days of intolerance are ended for all time, so far as Texas is concerned, and that we can now get down to business and make Texas what it should be, not only the biggest and finest, but also the happiest and best-governed State in the Union."

"There are too many pressing matters involving the material welfare of our people crying for attention for us to waste much more time in either religious or political strife. The development of our educational institutions, the conservation of our natural resources, the care of the insane, the building of roads, the humane and proper administration of our prisons, are just a few of the big problems confronting us. Those are the big things I must face, and with God's help I am going to do my best to solve them in the interest of all the people."

Mrs. Ferguson spoke of her great interest in agricultural problems, and particularly in the welfare of the family that owns a small acreage and in the tenants."

"I am going to do everything I can for them," she said, adding: "You know I am a farmer's daughter."

News photographs showing Mrs. Ferguson in the midst of a flock of white Leghorn chickens, another showing her with two mules—Democratic mules, she calls them—and other pictures showing her peeling peaches are misleading in suggesting her social status. She is a housekeeper, and is interested in the details of her farm, but the actual physical work she performs is done as a diversion and not from necessity. In no sense is she the kitchen drudge she has been called. The two Ferguson homes—the house in Temple and the country place on the outskirts of the city—reflect a comfortable way of life.

The campaign slogan, "Me for Ma," while effective as a vote-getter, does not embody any term ever used familiarly in the Ferguson family. The two daughters of the future Governor of Texas do not abbreviate the word "Mother." The "Ma" idea came from her initials, M. A. Ferguson, rather than Miriam Amanda Ferguson, her ordinary signature. "Ma" is not the kind of term applicable to a woman possessing as much dignity as Mrs. Ferguson, but when large automobiles and smaller cars passed her house, all bearing the printed phrase "Me for Ma," the first woman to approach a gubernatorial office smiled complacently. She knew well the force of the homely appeal.

TEMPLE CELEBRATES ON SUNDAY

A week ago when her selection was assured, for the first time in the history of Temple, Sunday was not a day of rest. The entire community regardless of previous affiliation celebrated her victory, and Templetonians were still giving vent to their enthusiasm when dawn came. During Sunday all roads led to Temple. Tourists detoured in order to pass the home of the first woman Governor. Texans from as far away as Dallas, Fort Worth and Waco and hundreds of small cities and villages came in automobiles, horse-drawn vehicles and by train to get a glimpse of the nominee and to see how Temple took its honors. For a day this city of 10,000 was the centre of the national stage and the population revelled in the spotlight.

Now that her victory has been won, Mrs. Ferguson seems to have been fortunate in her issue and in her political allies. But often enough good issues have gone down to defeat because leadership was lacking and allies could not supply the deficiency of a weak candidate. Mrs. Ferguson fought for religious liberty and for square dealing, and, although she was without previous experience on the political stage, she showed the characteristics which made the people of a conservative State willing to disregard their instinctive hostility to putting women in office and their particular dislike of her husband.

cannot be much affected by breaking into the natural evolution of the country by temporary gifts to indigenous enterprises. Probably the best foreigners can do is to establish what they regard as models in elementary, normal, technical, social and other types of education, more or less after the example of the Peking Union Medical School, and let the Chinese "take it or leave it" in part or in whole as allowed by their revised ideals and the difficulties of social change. Ultimately they may not want to adopt our modes of procedure at all; and if so they would be left much freer to develop along their own lines by the presence of a semi-Western model than by subsidies to their institutions conditioned upon living up to imposed Western standards.

And if, as Dr. Monroe suggests, private contributions could be encouraged by seeing money thus well spent, might not the scope of such an enterprise be widened until it might become of tremendous value in its higher branches as well—possibly in reaching out to the engineering, agricultural, journalistic, social, and other problems of China?

Now Dr. Monroe does approach the model school idea in his proposal for experiments in village education. Aside from the question of management, this idea is in line with steps recently taken by missionary educators in both India and China, and most highly to be commended. It is in his reference to a school of applied science and technology that he comes out avowedly for the model school idea. Apparently he has in mind a higher institution, adding to some existing university, and Chinese management. The question naturally arises, why this stress on the technical and scientific to the exclusion of the social sciences? His contention is the thing that China will take over the most quickly of her own accord, either by sending men abroad or training them at home. We wonder if Dr. Monroe knows how many trained engineers there already are in China who have not been able to find jobs! The most difficult situation to handle will be the transition in the social life of the people. That should be plain to every student of the Industrial Revolution in the West or of the social attitude upon which the recent war mania of the West fed. As the inevitable changes occur in industrial conditions, they will beget changes in family, community, educational, political and social life in general which call for sanity and vision. To make no room in model school enterprise for application of psychological, social, ethical, and other non-technical aspects of modern thought and research as applied to concrete situations, is to fall short at the most crucial point where modern education may make a real contribution to a nation undergoing a social transformation.

If the above conclusions are warranted, the model school that is needed is one ranging from the elementary grade of rural and town schools up through the higher branches of college and university work, which attempts to apply the techniques of biological and social as well as physical sciences in the West, to the needs of the Chinese people. With the private contributions expected under Dr. Monroe's scheme it might be possible to go a long way towards this end.

tors are falling victims of that most common popular illusion which elementary economics is supposed to dispel, that dollars, bank notes, negotiable assets, are more truly "value" than goods or services rendered? If there are to be strings at all, if there are to be precautions lest the Chinese do not get value received, if America wishes China to benefit and yet refuses to give her the mere negotiable medium of exchange without reservations—then, why not say frankly that the thing we ought to do is to see to it, right down to spending the last dollar, that China will get "full value." These educators go only half way, at present. They should either do one thing or the other, not pretend to do one while in reality doing the other. They should either give the money outright without any strings on it, or else give "value received" in terms of goods and services (educational or other) in such a way that the "Chinese people" will actually get the largest possible "value received" from the indemnity funds.

The educators' mild ineffective insistence that the Chinese people should secure value received, seems, in other words, just as inadequately provided for as the contrary insistence that the fund is "China's money"; and these compromises in turn are well represented in a board which it is claimed will prevent squeeze, nepotism, and inefficiency, but no constituted, and so "without strings" (!), as to furnish no guarantee of it.

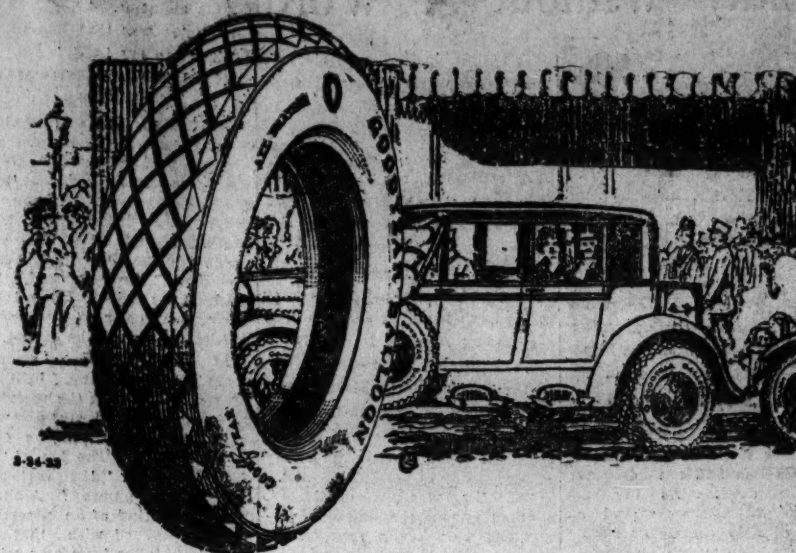

So much for the control of the funds. Now a word as to definite projects within the accepted "purposes" of the expenditure. In Grover Clark's interview with Dr. Monroe, the latter asserts his aversion to "duplicating institutions" already in existence. This is odd. When the Rockefeller Foundation, which supports the International Institute of Education of which Dr. Monroe is director, wanted to do a signal piece of service for American elementary and secondary education, they took the opposite course: they founded the Lincoln School of New York, in direct competition not only with public and private lower schools of all sorts, but with the Speyer and Horace Mann practice schools affiliated with the same University faculty as the new Lincoln was to be affiliated. And this Lincoln School—as did the other two in their early days—has undertaken experiments and produced text-books and methods which are revolutionizing elementary and secondary education in America. Now, if the Boxer indemnity funds are to do the permanent good which Dr. Monroe suggests, what would be the loss in bringing together a group of Chinese and American experts, giving them complete freedom from the personnel and precedents of existing institutions, insuring efficiency and detailed accounting of funds expended, and producing a model school which (1) would be an example to the schools of the country and (2) would turn out text-books and teachers' books that would lift the standard of education all over China? Attached to such a model school, (3) teacher training facilities might be provided in order to spread the school's ideals through personality. Would such "duplication of existing institutions" be a detriment to China? Would it be a loss in total efficiency? Not so the model-school enterprises in the West, it is admitted. They constitute the very brightest hope of Western education. Moreover, the fair seems to be that only by such "duplication" can Americans secure the Boxer fund will not be lost in the shifting sands of present-day inefficient schools. For the subsidizing of individuals and schools here and there throughout the country, following the wide-spread scramble for some part of the funds, will, without doubt, mean that in a few years the indemnity will have been dissipated and the Chinese schools will be in about the same condition they would have been without aid.

In the last analysis, the painfully slow process of social change which young China is undertaking

Goodyear Supertwist Balloon Tires

Now! Balloon Tires of super-quality.

Goodyear—built of Supertwist.

Supertwist—is the new and highly elastic cord material, perfected by Goodyear especially for balloon tires.

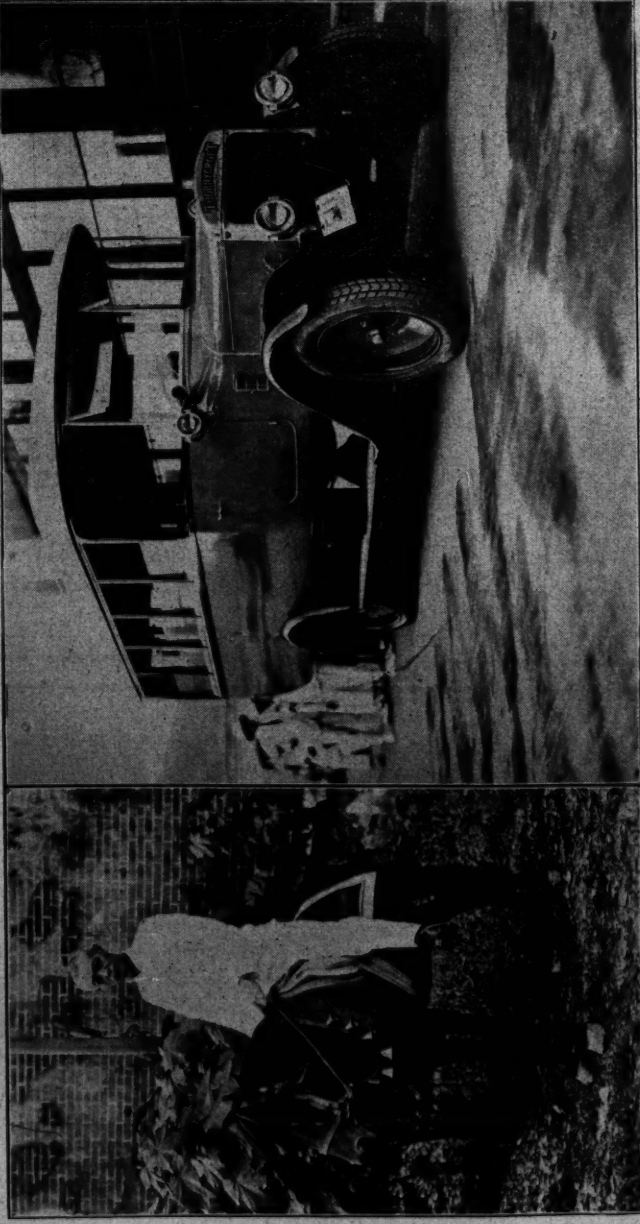

It makes the balloon tire practical, for it has the ability to withstand the continuous flexing required of balloon tires, and victoriously resist severe roadshocks.

This remarkable new cord material with 50% greater elasticity than any material ever used before, practically doubles tire life.

Supertwist—is used only by Goodyear. It is built into Goodyear Balloon Tires of both types—to fit new small diameter wheels—and to fit nearly all the cars now in use without change.

AN ADMIRAL ON HORSEBACK

Admiral Sah Chen-ping, now Civil Governor of Fukien, is well-known for his democratic inclinations and is popular with the masses in China. He contributes liberally to charity, and, unlike the general run of officials in China, he has not amassed a fortune, although he has held many high positions from time to time. He is now 67 years old but still retains the activity of a young man and does not look his age. This interesting photo was taken shortly after the Admiral's recovery from illness during the early part of August this year, as a result of which he has become a little attenuated.

LUXURIOUS MOTOR BUS

One of the two luxurious and comfort-ensuring motor busses recently imported from England by the Hongkong and Shanghai Hotels Company, for use in Shanghai. The bus will be used to convey passengers to and from the Company's hotels and the steamers and trains. The Company is leaving no stone unturned to cater to the comfort of their patrons, and these well-appointed busses will do away with the confusion and annoyance caused by yelling touts for motor cars and carriages in the vicinity of jetties whenever a tender or incoming ship unloads its passengers.

Help him Stand the Strain
WITH

From the minute he leaves home in the morning till he comes at night your husband is in the whirl and hustle of modern business life. Even his moments of relaxation are disturbed by the roar and noise of the city. No man can stand this strain without a special restorative for his nerves. Your husband may not be ill in the sense that he is "laid up," but his whole system is being weakened by the constant nerve wrack to which he is subjected.

If you want to keep him healthy, full of vitality and energy you must give him Sanatogen, regularly. Buy Sanatogen to-day and give it to your husband, regularly. In a few weeks he will be a new man, with a reserve strength and health that will delight him and you.

HANGCHOW'S THUNDER PEAK PAGODA CRASHES TO THE GROUND

Shortly after 1 p.m. on September 25, at the very hour that the first handful of General Sun Chuan-feng's soldiers were entering Hangchow to take possession of the old yamen of Lu Yang-shiang, the famous Thunder Peak Pagoda crashed to the ground and crumbled into a mass of ruins. Without the aid of rain, wind or earthquake, under a clear blue sky, this ancient landmark of more than a thousand years, which no visitor to West Lake will ever forget, simply crumbled toward the lake, over the southern shore of which it has stood faithful guard for ten centuries past. Small wonder the populace fears that the event has an ominous significance.

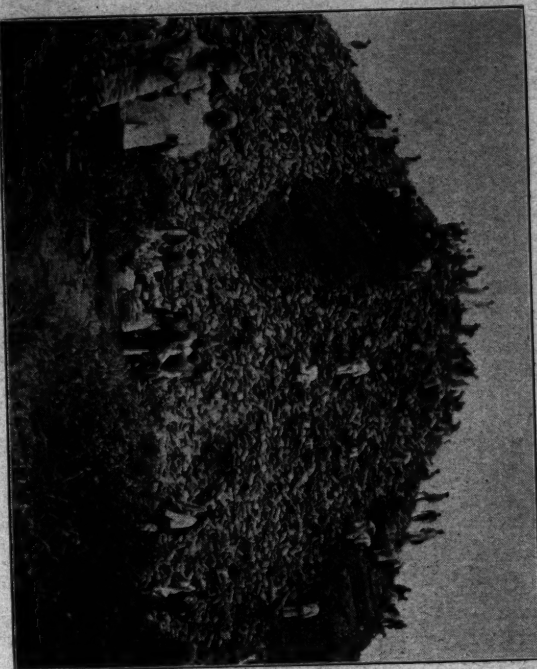

A close-up view of the ruins of the 13-century old Pagoda of Hangchow. This most picturesque landmark on the shore of West Lake fell into ruins at the very hour the first soldiers of General Sun Chuan-feng of Fuhien marched into the city to take possession of the old yamen of General Lu Yang-shiang, left empty by his departure for Shanghai.

Rains did not deter all of the seekers after relics in the ruins of Hangchow's famous Thunder Peak Pagoda. There was a steady stream of visitors to see the ruins until the police barred them off.

FUKIEN WARLORD FEELS AT PEACE WITH HIMSELF

The commander of the Fukien forces and the new Military Governor of Chekiang himself, General Sun Chuan-fang (in center with cane). The General is standing on the bow of his own boat, ready to start his long journey out to conquer the world. He looked worn and tired, but he smiled as if pleased with himself when the camera man asked him to look pleasant. So, too, did his staff.

To the right of Mr. Loh is Mr. Chang Shih-yun, the acting secretary, and to the left of Mr. Wang is Dr. Chang Chu-chi, medical director in charge of the branch. The branch was established on September 1, three days before the outbreak of the war. It has four squads of field workers and has organized a hospital and a home for the refugees. Two motor lorries have been hired by the branch to go to the front every day to bring back the wounded, and Dr. Chang had on several occasions been under fire himself. Since September 6, it has brought back from the field of battle more than 40 wounded soldiers and over 800 refugees from the war zone. Of the latter, 300 had to be sent to Shanghai to be taken care of by the Chinese Tze Sung Hui Internment Camp and the Homes for Refugees established by the Street Unions.

Henry gave a description of the annual conference in Geneva and made a forceful appeal in favor of organizations both for employers and employees in China sending delegates to the annual conference in Geneva so that the work of solving the intricate problem of labor might be co-ordinated. M. Henry is shown in the above picture addressing the gathering at the Great Eastern Hotel, while inset gives a close-up of this interesting visitor.

She stood in grand, 200 feet high and approximately twice as much in circumference, and was the most picturesque sight on the skyline around West Lake. The pagoda was marked the passing of the pagoda, but her like will never be seen again. Those who saw her before she fell may count themselves fortunate. A number of photos showing the Pagoda in ruins appear on page 2.

BASKETBALL YEAR OPENS WITH GOOD GAME AT Y.M.C.A.

Excellent Floor Soon To Be Available For Indoor Game

The basketball season here opened yesterday with a game at the Chinese Y. M. C. A., the All-Whites team, of local boys, defeating the five from the United States Destroyer 345, now in port, a score of 49 to 13. Though the game was very one-sided, it was a worthy opening, as the Chinese team put up a splendid exhibition and were fully entitled to their victory.

The first half was an utter slaughter. The sailors were apparently somewhat out of practice and were lacking both in team work and accuracy of goal-shooting. As the game progressed they showed marked improvement, but were rather outclassed by the local five.

The All-Whites started off as if they were going to whitewash the sailors. Wang, the brilliant center, succeeded in placing the ball almost where he wanted, and it was continually in the hands of the local five, who shot goal after goal without a come-back. The All-Whites showed splendid teamwork and speed. Bither Chao or Tan, the forwards, usually took the ball from Wang, and in both high and low passing showed excellent form, while their goal-shooting was also very good. Wang scored four goals himself in the first half, and Chao, left forward, also four. Tan, at right forward, twice shot difficult goals.

Some of the sailors showed brilliant individual streaks at times, but they displayed little ability to work together. Rauber, who jumped center for them, did pretty well, but was not properly supported. Flannery, at right forward, put up a good game, and at right guard checked the slaughter to some extent, but the sailors really never had a look-in in this half, which closed with the score 24 to 3, the lone sailor goal being made by Rauber.

In the second half both teams made some changes. For the All-Whites Chao took Chao's place at left forward. For the Navy team Ackerman, at left guard went out, Flannery taking his place, while the latter's position at right forward was taken by Brown. Early in the half Casey, at left forward, also went out, his place being taken by Schipper.

The sailors started off the second half with a rush, scoring three or four goals before the All-Whites retaliated. The Navy team showed improved team work, and a marked bettering in speed and passing, though their goal-shooting was still inferior to that of the Chinese team. Rauber was all over the floor, and with improved support succeeded in scoring several times, making four goals in all, in addition to a free toss on a foul.

The Chinese team were forced to extend themselves in this half, and played an even more brilliant game than in the first part. Wang continued his splendid work in center, and the ball was generally entrusted to Tan for the shoot for the basket. This right forward made five goals from the floor, in addition to scoring once on a free throw. The guards also, Nee and Lee, came in for their share of credit, covering and guarding excellently. Lee also scored two goals from the floor, and Nee one.

The All-Whites scored 25 points in the second half, as against 11 for the Navy team, making the final score 49 to 13. All-Whites Destroyer 345: Chao, Chang, H. Casey, Shipper, Tan, rt. Flannery, Brown, c. Rauber, Nee, lg. Ford, Lee, rg. Ackerman, Flannery.

Goals from floor, Tan 7, Wang 7, Rauber 5, Chao 4, Chang 3, Lee 2, Casey 1, Nee 1. Goals from fouls, Rauber 1, Lee 1. Referee, T. A. Peterson.

SPLENDID HALL SOON

With yesterday's game, basketball, which has won a place for itself in Shanghai not only with the American community but also with the British, Portuguese, and Chinese, started again for the winter season. One of the chief obstacles the game has had to face in the past, has been the lack of a good basketball floor.

Too much appreciation cannot be expressed to the Chinese "Y" and the Rowing Club for the generous way they have permitted their floors to be used during the past years. But it is a fact that adequate floor space, unobstructed and well lighted, suitable for the game, has never been supplied in any of the club buildings in the city, and it has seemed impossible to meet this need

J. PLUVIUS, IS ALL-ROUND WINNER IN LOCAL SPORTS

Unpopular Champion Takes Races, Tennis, Baseball And Cricket Here

Yesterday was Mr. Jupiter Pluvius' day in Shanghai sports. The Fifth Extra Meeting of the Shanghai Race Club, the Roper Cup Match, the ball game at Pioneer Field, the Men's Singles Championship at tennis, the cricket match scheduled, all gave way before this international figure, who carried everything before him.

Among the first to put up the white flag were the Race Club officials, who hung up a notice early in the day that the meeting booked for yesterday would be postponed until October 18. The cricket match scheduled at the Recreation Grounds was also called off.

The baseball game arranged for Pioneer Field, between the Gallipers and the All-Asiatic Fleet team, also had to be put off owing to the condition of the grounds. It is doubtful whether it will be able to arrange another game with this team today.

The two big tennis matches scheduled for yesterday, the Roper Cup Match and the Shanghai Singles Championship, also had to be postponed. In the first of these an American team, Messrs. Gulick and Hager, was going up against an English team, Messrs. Mansel-Smith and Goldman. In the latter match Mr. Wade was to meet Mr. Canavaro for the Singles Championship of Shanghai. Both these matches will be held next Saturday unless unforeseen circumstances arise.

AMERICAN TEAM IS NOW BEING FOUND IN WALKING MATCH

More Men Needed; Appeal To Americans; Start Training Soon

An American team is now being formed to enter in the International Walking Match here next month. It is hoped that the U.S.A. will have a quartette capable of holding up their end in this contest, and training will start soon. Everyone, interested in walking is urged to get into this, in order that there may be some possibility of a wide selection, and the team may be as high-class as possible.

There are many Americans here who have done much hiking, and all of them are asked to get into this. There is not only the natural pride in upholding the American standing in sport here, but the question of actual practice. Those who enjoy long walks know that it is much more worthwhile in groups, and the more the better. All Americans who like walking, and are not afraid of hiking a few miles, are asked to get into this. The Sporting Editor of THE CHINA PRESS will be glad to hear from all who want to get in, and help make up an American team which will be a credit to the American community.

Incidentally, it may be recalled that America had no team in the race last year. There were other nationals competing whose numbers were much less than the Americans here, for example the Irish, who came in second and in fact were the "first" to have all their men in. There were also the French, Scotch, and Italian. The Japanese, in spite of the natural handicap of their low stature, which is a very serious matter in walking contests, entered a team, in addition to which a number entered as individuals.

Under the circumstances, it is hoped that America will put in a real team this year, and every American here who feels that our nationals should hold up their end in international sporting contests should get in and help make the team as big a success as possible. The more men there are training, the better the squads can be divided and the team selected. Mr. Greenberg, a veteran walker, is prepared to start work, and Mr. Webb, last year's winner, has kindly volunteered his services in assisting in the training of the American team. There is every possibility of forming a strong U. S. team here which will be a real contender in the match, and every American should get in and do his part.

Boxing Notes

By Harvard

Next Thursday promises to be another big night at the Carlton. The main event is between Folyano, alias Clever Vally, and Pete Alberto, two boys who appear to rank among the best fighters that have been seen here. They weigh in at 110 pounds each, but have gone up against boys as high as the featherweight division. Alberto even has to his credit a victory over the redoubtable Johnny Hill, whom he has met three times, the other two results being a draw and a defeat on points.

Folyano's record is mostly with boys unknown in Shanghai. One clever local boy he has met, however, this being Faustino de Dios. Folyano was outweighed several pounds by de Dios, but got a clean-cut victory from him on points, which says much for the youngster. He has shown up very well in training here, and is apparently a high-class little fighter.

With regard to Pete Alberto, this boy has a rep which means a lot to Shanghai fans. In addition to his bouts with Johnny Hill, Pete has met Canlon, de Dios, Keenan, and Gabo, and has gained decisions over the last three. As for Canlon, Alberto met him twice, giving him several pounds, once going ten rounds to a draw and the other time losing on points in eight rounds. This looks like the real thing, and if comparative records worked mathematically he should be a sure winner over Folyano. It doesn't always work this way, however, and Folyano is a boy who is very capable of taking care of himself, to all appearances. We may expect a splendid exhibition.

In the semi-final Cyclone Nevsky will go up against a welter by name of Betts, who holds the title of Marines' Champion. Betts has shown up well, and appears to be fully as good as the Russian lad, with more knowledge of boxing and a pretty fair punch. He will outweigh the Russian boy by several pounds, in all likelihood, fighting at about 145 pounds.

Betts is the best of the sailors who have been tried out here. He appears to be a capable and plucky fighter, and very willing to scrap. More than this, he is apparently inclined to stand up and swap punches with an opponent, and this is all to Nevsky's taste. The Russian doesn't show up well with a boy inclined to wrestle, as Nevsky goes in for this sort of thing himself, and his bout with Tigora a couple of weeks ago was on this account pretty slow.

From all appearances, Nevsky will have to go the limit to lick (Continued on Page 2)

Technique Is Background Of All Inspirational Art

(This is the third of a series of articles on the cinema in China contributed by Miss Naomi Bailey at the request of THE CHINA PRESS in connection with THE CHINA PRESS Screen Beauty Contest.—Ed.)

BY NAOMI BAILEY

The background of every art, particularly of the stage and screen, is technique. According to Webster, technical means formal or literal as opposed to real.

The realist and literalist need not be alarmed over misuse of the word "technique", for technique is merely the foundation and there is ample latitude in any art for personal interpretation.

From Shakespeare to Arthur Hopkins, the great dramatic critics have advocated that style of expression which puts over stage action in the simplest and most effective manner. Simplicity does not imply lack of training, rather does it denote a perfected technique so skilful as to be unobtrusive.

It must therefore be evident, that there is a decided difference between "acting natural" and "being natural" on the screen and stage. When the trained actor walks on the stage, for example, bends to pick up a handkerchief from the floor, then sits down, we exclaim "How natural" and mentally note how easy it is. But suppose a person without knowledge of dramatic technique attempts the same action. He enters, walks up to the stage, crosses the left foot awkwardly over the right, bends down for the handkerchief as if performing his "Daily Dozen".

When he sits down he naturally looks behind him for the chair to avoid sudden collision with the floor—an unpardonable offense on stage or screen.

In the first instance, without appearing to have studied action, the actor has blended technique and natural action so smoothly as to seem spontaneous. Of course, it is only when this studied action assumes the ease of natural gestures that it can be tolerated.

It is true that we have artists who paint without having studied any particular "school" of painting but every painter must learn to mix his paints. The musician teaches his pupil the interpretations of the masters first until, when efficient, he may let his own emotions determine the tempo. If the pupil becomes an artist, his interpretations live.

No two great actors will interpret HAMLET in the same way, yet no actor could interpret HAMLET until his mind has freed his body to respond and his body freed his emotions to express the meaning of the lines. This is the purpose of technique.

It is a known fact that E. H. Sothern wears the carpet threadbare in spots because he invariably stands in the same position on the stage at every performance for the same speech. On the other hand, it is said of Miss Julia Marlowe that her work is entirely "inspirational", though I have known Miss Marlowe to spend an hour a day for months and months reading down the last words in a newspaper column to perfect her enunciation and tone coloring. Every sincere artist has skilled himself in his technical foundation as much as possible and left very little to chance or inspiration.

There can be no set rules for learning to laugh or cry, yet the actor who has learned to laugh mechanically by means of a set of laughing exercises is sure of himself whatever his mood may be. For the amateur who plays brilliantly "on his nerves" for one performance or for two or three nights before the lines get stale, definite "business" and tone inflection is not an absolute necessity (though it is to be encouraged).

But for the professional who faces three hundred or even one hundred and fifty nights and matinees of the same lines, the same laughs, the same tears, the fifth performance presents a sorry spectacle without definite action and inflection, for no matter how great his genius, the actor cannot hope for inspirational interpretation when his mind is weary and his body racked. In the third row center, one never dreams of the possible agony of a favorite star who has given each night a flawless performance. Sarah Bernhardt was practically an invalid for years; her suffering at times on the stage was excruciating—yet to the audience she had always the same brilliance and the same finesse.

The most successful actor is the one who has studied his lines until he strikes the keynote for the whole; then, when he has assured himself that this or that inflection is the best, fastens it with a mental safety pin so that he can depend upon it in any situation. This story is told of Madame Modjeska, whose beautiful speaking voice and careful technique placed her above the artists of her time. At a banquet at which no one spoke English she was asked to give a dramatic interpretation. When she had finished, many at the table were overcome with emotion. Asked what she had read, she replied: "The alphabet in English!"

Technique can never MAKE an actor, but an actor can be made by

The Football Association are now on a very sound footing and ended up last season with a nice balance in hand both in the ordinary accounts and the Interport fund. This season, with a ground at which a gate can be charged, the Association will at last be able to pay its way and not have to depend on just a few subscribers.

It is hoped that teams will be sent to Hongkong and Hankow and it is just possible that another port will be invited to send a team here.

There seems little doubt that there will be more and better soccer games played here this season than ever in the past. There are at present three strong naval teams in Shanghai. The first or second Saturday in November will probably witness a contest between a picked Navy team and an All-Shanghai team. There is no doubt that, with the material available at present, the sailors can field a side that will extend the best that our local men can provide.

In addition to the usual Saturday games, it is the intention of the Association to put on one good game every Sunday. Five teams have entered for the First Division of the League. This will mean an off game for one team every Saturday. The team that is idle on the Saturday will be pitted against a Naval or Chinese team on the Sunday.

The five teams that will compete for senior honors are the Shanghai Football Club, Shanghai Recreation Club, Marine Engineers, Police and the Portuguese Sporting Association. The S.F.C. appear to have about the same team that did duty for them last year. It is possible that Sereckin is returning to Shanghai, and if so, will be a welcome addition to the halfback line. I hear that Harris has been very successful in removing superfluous tissue and should be even more nimble between the sticks.

The Recs will be without the services of Knight, Witschl, and possibly Evans but are able to replace them with Freddy Ollerdesen, just back from the States, and Pat Madar, who played for the Public School last season. The S.R.C. may also have the services of N. Foox, who played for them some years ago but has been away from Shanghai for several years. While in the U.S.A. he played for the Olympic Club, the winners of the San Francisco League 1923-3. He is a good outside left and would just fill the vacancy caused by Witschl's emigration.

The Engineers have a number of recruits from various sources, and with their three Interport men still in hand, should be able to put up a good show. Some of the new men that will don the Engineers' colors are T. Madar and Turner, both with the Public School last year. Barnes and Sluis from the Customs, Favacho ex St. Xavier's. The Police have a large batch of recruits, many of whom claim football abilities. It remains to be seen just what these men are capable of. They have, however, one new player who is worthy of mention and who should prove a tower of strength. The new man's name is S. Gash. He played originally for Snodland in the Maidstone League and was later given a trial with the Woolwich Arsenal Reserves. He then went to Summerstown and last Easter toured with Dulwich Hamlet. Gash is equally at home in center half and center forward positions. The veteran "Jimmy" Quayle is still on the job. He was seen running around the Race Course, in company with a few of his team mates, the other evening and is undoubtedly trying to get his waist line down to respectable proportions ready for the start of the season.

The Portuguese Sporting Association, winners of the second League for the past two seasons, are forced under the new ruling to enter the First Division. Their last season's team has been strengthened by including Passos, Favacho and Marcal from St. Xavier's. It is also possible that Gue Remedios, Interport goalie for the last two seasons, may transfer from the Recs and play with his own nationals. The P.S.A. have a very quick and clever forward line but are a little apt to overdo the combination work. Once they get in the habit of shooting when close in, they will be one of the most formidable aggregations in Shanghai. Last season in the first round of the Skottowe Cup,

Zimbalist To Give 3 Concerts Here

Efrem Zimbalist, the violin virtuoso, will give three concerts in Shanghai towards the end of this month. They are booked for the Town Hall, and will be held on October 25, 28, and 30.

Zimbalist visited Shanghai, it will be remembered, a few years ago. He is one of the world's really great violinists, with marvellous technique and power of expression such as is surpassed by a very few indeed. His programs here for the end of this month are very varied, giving a wide range of musical production and including many composers, from Handel and Haydn to Grainger and Bizet.

The first night's program includes a Handel sonata, Grainger's "Molly on the Shore," Kreisler's "La Gitana" and "Liebeslied," Wieniawski's "Fantasie Faust," and other numbers. The second program is still finer in some respects, including Laro's "Symphonie Espagnole," Schumann's "Traumerel," Schubert's "Moments Musical," a nocturne and waltz by Chopin, Tchaikowsky's wonderful "Andante Cantabile," and Sarasate's "Zigeunerweisen." The third program starts with a suite in old style by Zimbalist himself, and also includes the beautiful "Rondino," adapted by Kreisler from a Beethoven theme, and a Carmen Fantasie, by Sarasate from Bizet.

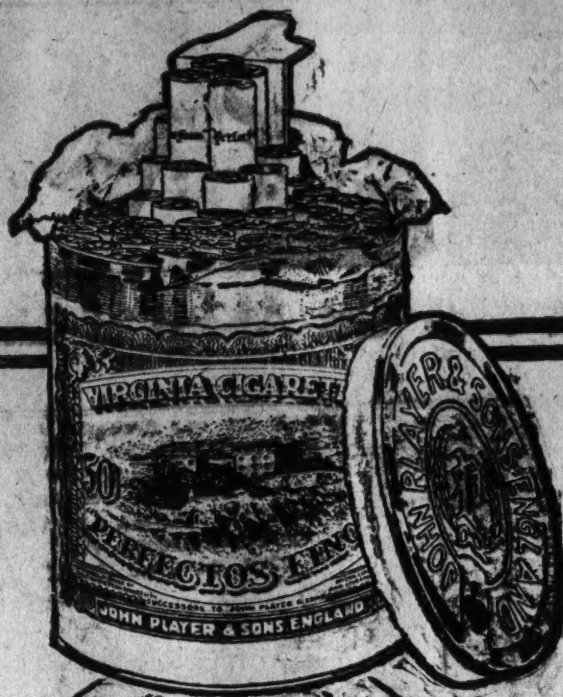

technique. The great inborn talent which raises the artist above the artisan can never be supplanted by the most enduring work, but talent liberated by intelligent technique is the best definition for genius that one can find.

NEWS AND NOTES FROM MANY LANDS

Dawes Plan Starts A German Trade Boom

France And Germany Moving Toward An Economic Alliance?

(By Our Own Correspondent)

London, Sept. 1.—In spite of garrulous protests and threats, the Dawes plan, as modified by the London Conference, is going to be given a trial. Whether it will prove a veritable "apple of discord" remains to be seen. It is possible that the Allies may later disagree on the "agreement" now reached. Trade rivalries and dread of anticipations about the industrial results of reparations are already causing alarm, whereas a few weeks ago public attention was focussed upon the necessity of adopting the Dawes scheme. The question is now raised as to whether Germany should be enabled to regain her industrial position. Although the Allies have undoubtedly taken a step in the right direction, it would be a blind man who could not see a great variety of obstacles ahead.

ENGLAND ALARMED

Already unfavorable reactions are emerging in England. Industrial circles have been alarmed over the probable effects of the London Agreement, and the London newspapers appear to be carrying out a campaign against granting Germany the £40 million loan. British coal, iron and steel industries are disturbed over the prospects of German competition. Britain fears a Franco-German economic combine and there can be no question but that the new Government in France is moving towards a "working" arrangement with Germany. It may be that the French and German coal and iron masters could rule Europe.

In the surprising interview granted to the Manchester Guardian, Mr. Snowden mentioned "the draft agreement" proposed between France and Germany, and said that it is a trade menace to Great Britain of the most serious character. But Premier MacDonald was quick to announce that Mr. Herriot had undertaken to communicate to him the proposals which would be made to Germany, and that a special committee would be formed to investigate the question of British industries suffering by reason of any trade agreement between France and Germany. But it is obvious that it will take more than official investigations to revive British industries and enable them to meet the keen competition of a resuscitated Germany.

GERMANY MUST CAPTURE EXPORT TRADE

Reparations payments must be made principally in goods. International settlements can be made in the transfer of gold only to a limited extent. It is obvious that Germany must pay reparations out of her export industries. What, then, is going to happen when Germany, assisted by the £40 million loan, resumes production on the great scale expected if she is to capture reparations? It stands to reason that Germany must compete with other countries, and furthermore that she must capture a large share of the export markets, Britain's in particular. Already business in Germany is improving. A friend in Berlin writes me that trade generally has increased 100% since the London Conference.

EVENTS WILL MOVE FAST

As soon as Germany provides the necessary measures for inaugurating the Dawes Plan, events will move fast. The Agreement lays down various stages before the Plan is to be considered to be in full operation. The first of these is the announcement by the Reparation Commission that Germany has passed the laws necessary to the working of the Plan. Under the provisional time table that announcement should be made today. Five weeks are then allowed for the completion by Germany of the preliminary executive measures precedent to the coming into operation of the Plan—namely, the actual constitution of the Bank of Issue, the Railway Company, and the various controlling and executive bodies. After the expiry of these five weeks—i. e. on October 7—a further fortnight is to be allowed in which the Allied Governments are to fulfil their part of the bargain—that is, to effect the removal and cessation of all economic vetoes and sanctions and the restoration of all mines, collieries, forests, and other property seized since the occupation of the Ruhr. The plan under this schedule would, therefore, be in "full operation" on October 22.

FRANCE BUSY AND PROSPEROUS

The Evening Standard, in comparing conditions in France with Great Britain, where the present unemployment figures almost equal the gloomy record of last February, says that France is busy and prosperous. According to a report issued by the Department of Overseas Trade, "the brilliant economic revival that ensued in the early months of 1922 has as yet suffered no eclipse. The entire population of France has continued in full employment, and her production has been consistently retarded by dearth of labor."

Coal production, despite the war damage of mines, is approaching the pre-war figure; foreign trade has been extremely active; wages show a steady upward tendency; and the prosperity of the country is attested by the "constant stream of immigrant workers."

There is a new business spirit in France. The "retail mind" which was formerly characteristic of that country has given place in a large degree to that talent for large combinations of which Germany was so notable an exemplar. French firms now have their fingers in many European pies. In Austria, in Poland, in Upper Silesia, in Czechoslovakia, in Rumania, and Yugoslavia the "big business" of France has established itself, and a topic of the moment is the possibility of a "consortium" between the German and French industrialists, which might, if it were established, compete mercilessly with the British metallurgical trades.

The revival of France has been made possible by co-operation, partly conscious and partly instinctive, between the Government, the employers and the employed. France suffered worse direct damage from the war than any country, and her financial policy has been the subject of much criticism. But she has at least been spared strikes and costly legislative experiments, and her present position is an advertisement of the value of mere steady work in repairing the ravages of war.

U.S. Must Hold Fast To Her Faith In China

Liang Shih-yi Pleads For Confidence In Chinese People's Sincerity

"If only the United States will continue to have faith in China, my country will work out its problems satisfactorily to all. But the American people must have confidence, genuine confidence, in the sincerity of the Chinese people. Such confidence will enable us to succeed. Without it our task becomes increasingly difficult."

That, in brief, was the message of His Excellency Liang Shih-yi, former premier of China and recognized internationally as the foremost financier of China. Mr. Liang, who left China March 5 on a tour of the world, has visited England, France, Germany, Italy, Switzerland, Austria, Belgium and Holland and recently was in America. During his visit to New York members of the China Society of America acted as his host and on Saturday, July 19, he was the guest of honor at a luncheon given by the Society at the Bankers' Club.

Liang Shih-yi speaks no English. Through his two secretaries, Y. P. Law and C. C. Lin, he told how he had sent his two sons and three daughters to this country for their college education.

"My children came home and told me about the wonders of America," he said. "I wanted to come long ago but I was too busy. And then this year I was able to come. Now I am sorry that I waited so long in coming."

Liang Shih-yi was taken to the roof of the Equitable Building to get a view of New York which is always long remembered by the person making his first visit here. As the former premier looked to the east and the west, the north and the south, he remarked, "Human efforts can do wonders. There seems to be nothing that modern science cannot accomplish, and that is why I have always placed science in the forefront in the education of the people."

"This is the land to which China looks," he said. "This is the land

What People Are Saying

"Our coal, iron, and steel industries are going to be menaced to an extent we have not known since the war."—Sir Robert Horne.

"It is a ridiculous fallacy to pretend that the commercial prosperity of one country is detrimental to the prosperity of other countries."—The Chancellor of the Exchequer.

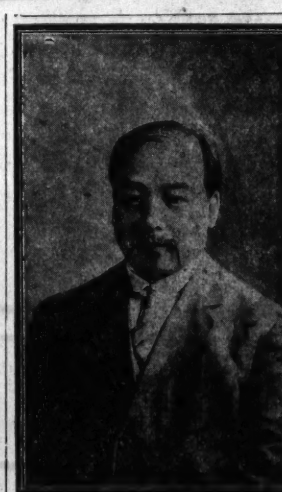

"There is another great class of dangers which we have to face. I refer to the economic problems which are bound to arise as soon as the Central European Powers find their feet. There will be an attempt on the part of southern international combines, using the weapon of political pressure, to subordinate common interests to their own. The defence of national interests and of national well-being against such moves as this must receive the most careful consideration and the firm action of democratic governments."—The PRIME MINISTER in his farewell to the Signatories of the London Agreement.

"It is a very disturbing business trying to get £125,000,000 per annum of German exports, unbalanced by imports, distributed among the creditor nations without injuring their trade. We cannot both take these goods and make them for ourselves, and if we don't take them, they will go into neutral markets and knock out our goods."—Mr. J. A. Spender in the "Weekly Westminster."

"For seven weeks what is perhaps at this time the most vital of our industries has been at a complete standstill. Millions of pounds have been lost by employers and employed. The public, who are clamoring for houses, have been put to untold inconvenience and disappointment. A hundred thousand men have been idle, without taking into consideration the repercussions of the strike on other associated industries. Want, misery, even suicides, have been its offspring. The inevitable end is compromise, but not before the country has suffered immeasurably in the loss of wealth, time, and temper."—Daily Express.

"Can we afford a Socialist Government any longer? Can we watch unemployment increase while Socialist Ministers produce chaos at home and abroad, and drag us nearer the abyss? In the last two years there has been no in which China has invested her hopes. When other countries came to China to make money Americans came to establish schools and colleges and hospitals and missions. To be sure we want the Americans to engage in business in China and Americans did, but the spirit that prompted the return of the Boxer indemnity is the spirit which has typified the American.

"To you, my good friends, I wish to express my gratitude for your kind hospitality and good wishes. I am grateful to you too for the opportunity you have given me to meet your leaders of finance. I am interested in your Society and its purposes and I wish you every success.

"Inasmuch as my children were educated here I have a real sentimental interest in America. There is every reason why the relations

Campaigning With Davis In The Mid-West

Observations Made During The First Foray Into Enemy's Country

BY SAMUEL MCCOY

In the last two weeks (ending August 31) there began a human adventure.

For several days I have been watching the man setting out on this adventure. Just to watch the start makes the heart pump a little faster—for to watch a man as he starts off on such an expedition of the soul is not different in its essence from watching the buckskinned frontiersmen cross the Missouri a hundred years ago.

The particular adventure I have been watching is that of John William Davis in beginning his campaign for the Presidency of the United States.

A candidate's campaign is an adventure, in a sense worth the reflection it needs to discover it. Not many of us think of it in that sense. We troop down to the railroad station when his train comes through and stare at him curiously, as if he came from some other planet. We rate this as an adventure of our own, to have seen him, an adventure to talk over in years to come. We are thinking all the while about ourselves. We are wondering what benefit will come to us, personally, if we elect him. Thinking thus of ourselves only, we miss a comprehension of his own adventure.

Yet what is more nobly adventurous, more exciting, more solemn in American life than an attempt to prove one's self worthy of the friendship and most of thirty million men, thirty million women and fifty million young people, and to do this within the space of three months?

A candidate for the Presidency may choose the way in which he seeks to win this acquaintance with "the People." He may stay at home and make a "front porch campaign," deliver few addresses and abide by the ability of his campaign managers to present his picture to the nation. Or he may in person go out to seek the people's friendship, see and be seen by millions from coast to coast and stand or fall by his own strength or limitations.

The latter course is adventure. And particularly does it seem adventurous if the man who chooses it has not had the years of experience as a stump speaker which is the usual equipment of the professional politician.

ELEVEN CANDIDATES COMPARED

Among eleven Presidential candidates of the past twenty-four years, six may be said already to have become well accustomed to the atmosphere of politics and of political speechmaking before they became the nominees. These were Bryan, McKinley, Roosevelt, Cox, Harding and Coolidge. The other five, Parker, Taft, Hughes, Wilson and Davis, up to the time of their nominations had taken comparatively little part in political campaigns as speakers. They had devoted the major portion of their lives to law practice or government administration or the cloistered study of political history. Their acquaintance with professional politicians was comparatively limited, their acquaintance with people assembled to hear a political speech was even more limited.

Parker and Hughes never became platform speakers of the day; they were popular speakers of the day. Their acquaintance with professional politicians was comparatively limited, their acquaintance with people assembled to hear a political speech was even more limited.

Whether he succeeds or fails, he has chosen the course of adventure, to hazard all upon personal contact with all the people of the nation.

To realize how much of an adventure this is it is necessary only to glance at Mr. Davis's past training. As a political campaigner his past experience has been limited chiefly to his campaign for Congress a dozen years ago in a district whose population numbered a comparative handful and in whose leading city he was born, brought up and entered the profession of law. The greater portion of his life has been occupied in work which brought him into personal contact with a comparatively small circle. He met the people of his home district. He met his law clients. He met his opponents in his law cases. As a member of Congress he met hundreds of leaders from all sections of the country. In his law practice in New York he came in contact with powerful minds. As Ambassador to England he met the statesmen of other nations.

But never, like William Jennings Bryan, had he traveled the United States from corner to corner, meeting men of every section, addressing crowds made up of every shade of political opinion, coming into intimate contact with the millions to whom a President must answer. Never, like Theodore Roosevelt had he hounded with "locomotive" drivers, rode with ranchmen, romped with Tom and Dick and Harry. It became his business, with his nomination in July, to meet the people of the United States of America.

A genuine adventure; one that called for resolution and confidence in one's self. A fortnight ago it began, and now it is well under way.

What burden does such a campaign place upon him and how does he meet it?

On August 25 he boarded the train at New York for Columbus, Ohio—his venture into that mighty section of the nation west of the Atlantic seaboard. It is unlikely that John W. Davis will ever forget a certain little city in Ohio at which his train made a momentary halt last Tuesday evening. Mr. Davis was not scheduled to make any speech there. He had probably never seen that town before in his life. He didn't even know its name until somebody told him. But he ought to remember it, because it was the first small town, outside his native East, whose men and women and children gathered at the railway station to cheer him as the Democratic nominee for President.

There they were, perhaps 200 of them, who had waited until nearly 10 o'clock at night just for a glimpse of him. It wasn't pre-arranged—it was natural. To look at those upturned faces was to see in imagination the whole of America—the people of 10,000 towns, just like this (unique only because it was the first of them all), all waiting for a glimpse of the man who might lead them nearer their hope.

LEANED DOWN TO GRASP THEIR HANDS

Mr. Davis couldn't say anything. It would have been an utterly emotionless man indeed who did not feel his heart beat strangely at the sight of these eager eyes, and the knowledge that they looked to him for leadership.

"Give us a speech!" they shouted. But the man on the platform could only smile at them and lean down to grasp their hands. He was very thoughtful when he came back to us in the car. And from what he said at last it was plain that he had been pondering long over what he might do in the future the better to express to such crowds his faith in them and his determination to serve them.

The capacity of Memorial Hall, at Columbus, where Mr. Davis first "challenged Mr. Coolidge by name, is 4,500. An hour before he rose to speak there were 4,500 people in it. There wasn't room for one more person, from platform to ceiling over the balcony. When the tall, gray-haired man in the dark blue suit came upon the platform there was a roar of applause that rocked the ceiling. But he didn't seem to take it as a tribute to himself. He didn't step out of the line of leaders of the Democracy in Ohio who were escorting him upon the platform. He didn't advance to the edge of

Glasgow Experiments In Civic Farming

Interesting Facts And Figures Are Revealed By Inspection

(By Our Own Correspondent)

Glasgow, Aug. 23.—A number of interesting facts and figures regarding the Corporation of Glasgow's experiments in municipal farming were revealed in the course of the annual inspection by members of the Cleansing Committee and their guests of the estates and farms at Ryding and Robroyston. In municipal agriculture, the Corporation of Glasgow are pioneers, and in developing this enterprise they have shared the experience of all pioneers in that they have known adversity as well as success. The past four years of agricultural depression have brought times of misfortune, even for municipal enterprise, nevertheless since its inception in 1892 this part of the city's many varied activities has accumulated a credit balance which now stands at £19,342.

In making this announcement, Bailie George Kerr, convenor of the Cleansing Dept., added with pardonable pride that, although these farming operations were not instituted with a view to making profit, but to provide an outlet for the disposal of the vast amount of refuse of the city, they had been conducted without imposing any burden upon the rates," says the Glasgow Herald.

"At present the Corporation's farms, which number 12, with an extent of 1,600 acres, are all under grain and root crops, and this year, despite the adverse climatic conditions, an excellent yield had been produced.

An interesting suggestion was thrown out during the inspection by a practical agriculturist that the Corporation would do well to reduce part of their holdings to grass and institute stock feeding, which has proved the most profitable branch of farming in recent years.

Bailie Kerr gave a most interesting resume of the growth of the Cleansing Dept. during the past 56 years. The principal guest at the inspection was Sir Joseph Cook, Lord High Commissioner of Australia, who arrived in the city on business during the week, and who paid a tribute to Glasgow's municipal enterprise.

WAR ROMANCE ENDED

In Edinburgh Bankruptcy Court this week, Sheriff Orr granted a warrant for the arrest of Thomas Cowan Steven, shipowner, 2 St. Andrew Square, Edinburgh. The case had been continued from June to give the bankrupt time to appear but he was again absent.

Thomas Cowan Steven had a remarkable career during his 12 years' association with shipping. In his early twenties, after having gained experience as a shipping clerk in a Leith office, he struck out on his own account with his twin brother, and chartered a steamer. This was before the war. The steamer traded between Firth of Forth ports and the Continent, and the venture prospered.

When the war broke out, the firm of T. C. Steven and Co. had already been formed. During the war some important contracts were secured, the chief being the carrying of oil for the French Government. Steven, who did insure his vessels, lost only one of his fleet. When the war was over, the firm was offered over a million pounds for the business, but the offer was refused. They had two vessels building which were to cost about £60,000. Owing to the rapid rise in the cost of shipbuilding, they actually cost £180,000.

Other losses were suffered owing to the slump in shipping, and the firm came to the end of its financial tether. To recover the ground lost, it is understood that like another war-time firm, recourse was made to the profitable trade of shipping whisky to America. Large losses were incurred by the non-payment of the consignees and it was on a journey to enforce payment that Steven disappeared.

During June, when the word of the bankruptcy was first noised abroad, numerous stories were unfolded in which the arrogance of newly-acquired wealth was the principal feature. Such stories as the one which stated that Steven possessed 365 suits and 90 overcoats and rented an office near his business address to be used as a wardrobe were quite common. Be that as it may, we cannot but think that a romantic figure has disappeared and an adventurous career has been brought to an untimely end by the exigencies of the law.

DEATH OF CLYDE SHIP-BUILDER

The death has occurred at his home in Greenock, of Mr. Arthur Caird. Mr. Caird was a member of the world-famous shipbuilding firm of Caird and Co., Greenock, whose business was acquired by Messrs. Harland and Wolff some years ago.

The youngest son of the late Mr. James Tennant Caird, Mr. Arthur Caird was born at Greenock in 1853 and was educated at Greenock Collegiate School and Merchiston Castle School, Edinburgh. Having served his apprenticeship with the firm as shipbuilder and engineer, he entered the designing department, of which he afterwards took control, and was mainly responsible for the high-class architectural plans for the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company's fleet and that of the other great ship-owning firms for whom Messrs. Caird and Co. built vessels.

Mr. Caird was a member of the Institute of Naval Architects and of the Institute of Engineers and Shipbuilders in Scotland. In his native town he filled many public offices at one time or another with great acceptance, and was greatly esteemed in the community. He is survived by his wife and son, daughter, and stepdaughter.

PROPOSED AEROPLANE CLUB

The London Correspondent of the Glasgow Herald, writing in today's issue, says: "In connection with the scheme for establishing light aeroplane clubs in this country, the Air Ministry have just addressed a letter to the Lord Provost of Glasgow explaining the scheme, and pointing out the advantages to be derived by the community as well as by the State from the development of civilian flying."

"Reference is made to the fact that the Air Ministry are prepared to make financial contributions to the clubs which, in the first instance, are to be limited to number to ten, and the Corporation are asked to consider the establishment of a club in the West of Scotland."

"I am informed that the Scottish Aeronautical Society is actively interesting itself in the project for forming a club in Glasgow, and that Lord Weir and his brother, Brigadier-General J. G. Weir, are associating themselves with the movement."

A SAD STORY

One of Glasgow's daily papers this week announced that, "The Baron Vernon left Glasgow yesterday morning under the escort of a Dutch seagoing tug to be towed to Rotterdam, where repairs will be carried out."

The steamer Baron Vernon, it will be remembered, was thrown up the bank of the channel in the Clyde near Langbank in May last year as the result of a collision with the ill-fated liner Metagama. The Baron Vernon received a deep gash in the bow, which ran from the deck to below the water-level. Salvage operations were carried out under the direction of Captain Henry Enser, of Queenstown, and after many difficulties the foundered vessel was raised, brought up river and dry-docked at Govan. The vessel has been bought by a Glasgow shipbroker, and after the repairs temporarily effected at Govan will be overhauled and fitted for sea by a Dutch firm.

Such, then, is the state of things on the Clyde that a Glasgow boat can be sent to Holland, not even under her own steam, and can apparently after that be more cheaply made ready for sea. Shades of departed greatness!

BRIDGE CONTRACT FOR GLASGOW FIRM

The "Industrial Daily News" is officially informed that the London Midland and Scottish Railway Co. have placed with Sir William Arrol and Co. (Limited), of London and Glasgow, the contract for the new ferry bridge at Tilbury.

The bridge which will carry the ferry load across the railway just outside Tilbury Station, will, with its three viaduct approaches, have 45 spans, ranging from 22 feet to 98 feet. A steel and brick bridge with reinforced concrete foundations and concrete piles is to be built, the steel work involved amounting to 1,280 tons. The construction of this bridge will enable the reconstruction of Tibury Station, planned in connection with the proposed new passenger landing stage at Tibury to be carried out.

ASSOCIATION FOOTBALL
The Scottish football season was inaugurated last Saturday under most depressing weather conditions. With one exception, the games were carried through the downpour of rain which had the effect of keeping away a good many of the followers and may be held responsible for the generally poor display of form.

There were no sensational openings, and while it is early in the day, it is safe, on the showing, to prophesy that the clubs which last year played a prominent part will again have a good deal to say for themselves.

Rangers, Hibs, Hamilton Academical, Queen's Park, Airdrieonians, Falkirk and Hearts were winners.

Rangers were slower than usual in settling down but they played with all their old-time smoothness and defeated Raith Rovers, who administered a surprise defeat last season. Airdrieonians, the Cup-holders, were slower but gave plenty of promise. Queen's Park delighted their admirers by returning a victory over Motherwell, who were on the whole, however, unlucky to lose.

St. Johnston and Cowdenbeath, the two newcomers to the first league, were on the losing side, but both did well enough to suggest that, when accustomed to their surroundings, they will do better.

between the United States and China should be most pleasant and profitable to both. We have only the Pacific Ocean separating us and in these days when American visitors hop from one end of the continent to the other during daylight and when American army officers are flying across the world with accident-proof, distances mean little.

Study the history of the relations of the two countries and you will see every reason why China and the United States should be fast friends. And finally there is the feeling of the people of China toward the people of the United States. It is most cordial. And it should continue to be so.

Back in 1914 America exported $2,000,000 worth of goods and merchandise to China. Last year that increased to $30,000,000. In 1914 China sent to America goods valued at $3,000,000. Last year that amount had increased to $70,000,000. So while our political conditions have been unsatisfactory trade has gone on. And it shall continue to go on.

China's trade with the United States ranked sixth ten years ago. Today it ranks third with the British Empire first and Japan second.

But the important thing is for the United States to have faith in China. And here lies the task of the China Society of America. You who understand China's problems and appreciate China's potentialities must help us to acquaint the rest of the American people with China and the spirit of the Chinese people. Have faith.

Tries In Vain To Get In Jail By Taxicab Ride

New York, Sept. 2.—Alexander Dolowitz, 38, tried to be sent to jail recently but failed. Dolowitz said he went to a lot of trouble for nothing when the court refused to order him locked up.

He had been arrested after admitting he was unable to pay a $3 taxicab bill which he had run up. When brought into Night Court he was ordered dismissed when the complainant Michael Hill, 1730 Webster avenue, the Bronx, a chauffeur, failed to appear against him.

"You're a lucky man," declared Magistrate Goodwin, in ordering his discharge. "Lucky, nix," replied Dolowitz. "I went to all this trouble for nothing."

He said he had no home, and pleaded with the court to send him to jail. "I can't do that," replied the magistrate, "there is no prosecuting witness here."

Dolowitz then appealed to the arresting officer, Patrolman Frank Smith. "Can't you put me in jail?" Smith asked.

Smith said he suggested the man should break in jail on an assault charge, but Dolowitz replied, "I want to resort to violence. I am not that kind of a person."

real reduction in the total number of unemployed in Great Britain, registered and unregistered; and the indications are that in another two years there will be a swift rise in the unemployment statistics, unless our Socialist rulers mend their ways. Will they ever change? Will they ever learn? I doubt it. They are a Government of theory and illusion. They take no note of contemporary industrial endeavor.—Lord Rothermere in the Sunday Pictorial.

"As the Covent Garden strike is not going, from Mr. Bevin's point of view, according to plan," he is calling out his reserves. Yesterday instructions were issued to the dockers at the ports that they must not handle fruit and vegetables coming from abroad. That is to say, the people of this country, at Mr. Bevin's bidding, are to be denied essential food supplies because the demands of the Covent Garden porters have not been satisfied. So instructive an object lesson in Trade Union despotism will not, we must hope, be lost upon the public.—Morning Post.

"British airways have completed their fifth year. In 1919, when aeroplanes began to fly between London and Paris, there were three questions civil aviation had to answer. Can 100-miles-an-hour air transport be made reliable? Can it be made safe? Can it pay? Take reliability. Our winged express have now flown more than 4,000,000 miles. During the summer they have attained a reliability figure of 91 percent. Even with winter fogs, the all-the-year-round figure is as high already as 88 percent. This, remembering that organization is being improved constantly, disposes of the contention that aeroplane transport cannot be liable. As to safety, British planes have carried nearly 50,000 passengers, and only six have lost their lives. Which is an answer to the question 'Can flying be made safe?' It can".—Daily Mail.

"I had to choose between the Entente and isolation," declared M. Herriot. "I have made my choice, and it now for Parliament to choose."

"M. Herriot declared that he had put an end to the 'romantic idea' that to ensure the fruits of victory Germany must be ruined, and the sentiment was loudly cheered. It is to be hoped that those cheers will be noted in Berlin".—The Times.

"We must be very grateful to Herriot for not having confused 'security' and 'reparations', as has been hitherto the case. Reparations must be argued over among financiers in London. Security has to be guaranteed to us by the League of Nations in Geneva. For security lies neither in the Ruhr nor on the Rhine. There will be no security anywhere for us as long as we stand alone. As Gustave Tery (editor of the Oeuvre) pointed out very clearly the other day: in ten years hence France will hardly be able to mobilise three and a half million men, whereas Germany will have at her disposal ten million".—Paul Boncour in the Oeuvre.

"Everybody in Russia today is worse off than before the war."

"Such is the verdict on the Revolution given to the Independent Labor Party Summer School by Mr. Michael Farbrman, whom we have found to be amongst the most reliable of British writers on Russia under the Soviet Government. It is a complete condemnation, for it places Russia in a class entirely apart from all the other countries which were seriously affected by the upheavals of the last ten years".—Glasgow Herald.

"The Berengaria, in which the Prince of Wales is travelling to America, is one of the largest boats fitted with the automatic quartermaster or gyro-pilot. Briefly, the system practically eliminates the errors common to human judgment in the steering of a vessel, and once the course is set—which is effected by turning a small wheel to the desired degree—the master gyro-compass may be considered as in charge of the ship though there is always a man at the wheel to deal with emergency conditions. It is seldom, however, that he is more than a passive onlooker of a wheel that, in a curiously uncanny manner, turns itself to the required extent, and thus compensates for the effect of both wind and waves as they tend to deflect the ship from her course".—Morning Post.

served in the army and whom Mr. Davis chose from his former law office to act as his personal secretary. There was the astute and jovial "Jack" Nevin, his press representative, who knows every politician and statesman between Paris and Pocatello. There were National Committeemen "Ed" Moore and the veteran counselor George White, chief aid to Chairman Shaver of the National Committee. There were two stenographers. And there were a dozen newspaper correspondents, representing press association and great dailies, who filled up all the remaining room and spilled over into adjoining Pullmans.

LEISURE IS ADJOURNED

Through this racketing corridor of men and baggage one stumbled to find comparative quiet, but no cessation of work in Mr. Davis's stateroom. There he sat untroubled and genial, his attention fixed steadily upon phase after phase of the approaching campaign. I asked him when he would have a moment of leisure. "I'll never have more than this, from now till election day," he said, smiling, and motioned me to a seat beside him.

John Davis, as we discovered in traveling with him in these close quarters, puts on no frills and is a mighty human sort of companion. In the campaign he has not yet told many anecdotes, though he is said to have a stock of them, but he is that rare person, a good listener, and his laugh is quick and spontaneous. The only story I heard him tell was the one about old man Brown's funeral, and which he told as illustrative of Republican attempts to say a kind word for their own record of the past three years.

"Old man Brown," said Mr. Davis, "was a character who had never been known to do anything that wasn't stingy. At his funeral, when the minister asked if there wasn't some one present who would like to say a few words over the coffin, there was a unanimous silence for an embarrassing interval."

"Finally," said Mr. Davis, "one of the neighbors got up, cleared his throat and observed: 'Wal, he wa'n't as mean some of the time as he was all the time.'"

I watched Mr. Davis working steadily through five days of travel, speech-making, ceaseless conferences with local leaders and National Committeemen, unending visits from every one who could gain men wedged in between, and at last I hunted up Mrs. Davis and asked her if her husband ever found time to rest and if she thought him strong enough to bear up under this load.

"It's been this way ever since his nomination," she said smiling a trifle sadly. "He's up at 7 and is as busy as you see him now until late every night. At home on Long Island we never have an opportunity to go out together alone. Sometimes in the evening I manage to get him to play a game of backgammon just to take his mind for a little while away from his preoccupations, but that's not often.

"If he hadn't been a tremendously hard worker all his life, I would be afraid for him. But he's really very strong. It seems to me he's worked eighteen hours a day ever since I knew him, and he loves it. His appetite is splendid—he eats everything—and when he's at home he likes to get up early and take a plunge in the Sound. That's about the only exercise he's had lately."

"Does he find his campaign speeches a tax on his voice?" "No," said Mrs. Davis, "but he has told me that it bothers him to keep in a position on the platform where his voice will enter the radio microphone. You see, he would naturally like to forget the radio and get close to the audience he sees before him. He wants to talk to people face to face. And it bothers him a little to be obliged to keep the microphone always in mind. It's something between him and the people, he feels."

A MATTER OF PRACTICE
"He'll soon get used to that," ventured Dr. Richardson. "It's just a matter of practice." I asked the physician if Mr. Davis's throat could stand the strain of the arduous campaign he has set for himself.

"He should have no trouble at all," he answered confidently. "Mr. Davis's throat is perfectly normal, and if he avoids colds there will be no trouble with it. If it gets fatigued, a little mechanical exercise on the muscles will bring it rest. I'm sure."

When John W. Davis came to his first battle-grounds—the platforms before which stood the thousands of the people with whom he plans to become acquainted at first hand—he advanced certain observations on Republican administration of government, certain promises of Democratic reform. To me, studying the faces in those audiences as he spoke, the manner in which they received his analysis of the political situation was absorbingly interesting.

Incidentally, Mr. Davis's audiences are enjoying a treat of wit of an intellectual quality rarely possessed by political speakers.

He seldom tells a "funny story," but depends instead upon sarcasm. These never fail to tickle his audiences. I counted, during the Columbus speech, which lasted hardly an hour, no less than twenty-four separate shafts of sarcasm which brought laughter from the audience. Mr. Davis seems to have no difficulty in persuading his hearers that he has a sense of humor; his problem is to discover just how much of it they think necessary.

His first discovery was that Democratic audiences, at least, are far from believing that to discuss the scandals in oil leases and in the administration of the Veterans' Bureau is to revive a dead issue. His reference to these matters awoke instant response.

THE "WAY TO BANISH WAR"
His insistence that "the only way to banish war is to set up some permanent plan of conference, consultation and adjustment to take its place as arbiter among the nations," likewise was hailed with cheers whose spontaneity seems to show that this is an issue still close to the hearts of many.

On the subject of tariff, when, in his seagirt address, he sought to bring the subject home to the housewife by specific discussion of duties on kitchenware, sewing machines and footwear, the usual stupefied silence of the layman in the presence of that abstruse subject was noticeable; but when, at Columbus, he confined his reference to the tariff to the generality that the Fordney-McCumber tariff made life "easy and prosperous for those who are least like the poor in their ways and manner of living," he drew quick laughter and applause. The often-repeated assertion that such a tariff "takes from one man in order to enrich another" seemed to have lost none of its power to bring approving shouts from the crowd.

When, at Seagirt, he concluded his address with his denunciation of the Ku Klux Klan, the pitch of fervor, which instantly manifested itself in the audience before him—an audience which undoubtedly contained many members of the Klan—was astonishing. It was plain that Americans have not lost their admiration for a man who minces no words on a matter which concerns American institutions even if it may not affect governmental affairs. That audience instantly made John W.

At Columbus, before his address excited speculation as to whether Mr. Davis would again refer to the Klan was heard on every side. He made no direct reference to it, and there was noticeable afterward a sense of disappointment.

The Memorial Hall address at Columbus wrought his audience to repeated bursts of applause; it was ranked as fine a piece of political argument as any living Democrat could deliver, and yet after Mr. Davis's train had left Columbus that evening an incident occurred which again throws light on the man.

We sat at dinner on the train and in the casual conversation at his table Mr. Davis sat silent and preoccupied. At length Mrs.

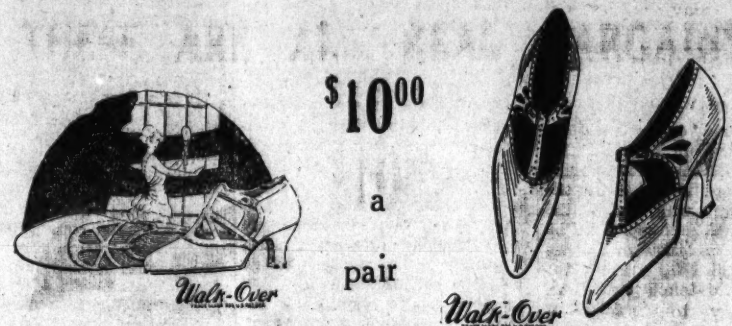

Davis reproached him. "John," she said, "you've been sitting there thinking about that speech, haven't you, now? I know—you've been going over and over every line of it to yourself. Can't you stop and rest a little?" "Yes," admitted Mr. Davis, rousing himself with a start from his meditations. "I was thinking of that speech—I've been thinking of a dozen places where I might have improved it."

Extract from the North China Daily News of September 22nd.

Autumn is here, and with her has come a profusion of lovely fashions, which, like the first colourful leaves of Autumn, have descended upon us at an unexpected moment, vividly prophetic of the modes that will prevail in the world of fashion during the winter season. Despite the simplicity of line there is no lack of variety in the fashions of the new season. Fabrics were never so beautiful, trimmings never more exquisitely lovely, nor were details ever more charmingly complete and correct. Godet treatments, scarfs, stoles and capelets are only a few of the details that acquit the new Autumn modes of the slightest suggestion of monotony and lift them far above the fashions of other years in beauty, variety and charm. True to prophecy the sued-finished fabrics are in highest favour for suits, coats, etc. It is a far cry from the heavy, bulky fabrics of yesterday to the softly-clinging woollens of to-day. For street garments brown is a great favourite, ranging from the exquisite russet and copper tones to a rather subdued malay. On the street one sees also quite a few coats in soft mahogany tones. Artichoke and other soft greens are seen, and a revival of gray is suggested by the number of coats appearing in dark shades of taupe or mole. Linings are most important. Satin and crepe linings continue much in vogue and many interesting effects are secured through the use of plaid or striped kasha. Evening wraps are mainly of rich brocades, velvet or satin. Occasionally one sees an evening wrap of crepe satin or even very sheer material. These wraps of lighter weight usually depend on a soft lining of printed velvet for warmth. Oftentimes they are reversible.

The above might well have been written after a visit to our Drapery Department, for it so aptly describes the modes. Why not call and inspect the Autumn Display?

It was always easier, back in the pigtail and barefoot days, to play dolls or run away to a baseball game than to endure that "pleasant hour," as mother insisted on calling it, at the piano. But half a generation later, sitting hungrily in the presence of great music, how many of us wish that we had not smothered those budding artistic impulses.

Much of the fear and dread of youth toward music is due not to the vulgarising of the race or anything inherently wrong with the child, but simply and directly to bad teaching. It is an absurdity to expect over-worked teachers, themselves often without the artistic spark, to make harmony attractive or understandable to youngsters. But we persist in the old habit and continue to treat music as one of the mystical wonders of life just as we continue a multitude of other superstitious hangovers from the Neolithic Age.

It is to take the mystery out of music and to make its simple beauty intelligible to everyone that Sigmund A. Spaeth has written a delightful new book, THE COMMON SENSE OF MUSIC. Dr. Spaeth is known in America as music critic of one of New York's largest newspapers and as the chief exponent of the attempt to popularize music throughout the States. His lectures on music in New York have brought him audiences averaging more than 10,000 listeners per week.

"This book is written on the assumption," says the author, "that musically all men are created free, though not necessarily equal." It presupposes no knowledge on the part of the reader and it admits no fundamental ignorance. It does not worry about the hair-splitting of the technical scholars; it merely tries to approach the subject in a common-sense fashion, assuming a universal instinct of musical appreciation.

THE COMMON SENSE OF MUSIC is the most unique and helpful book that has been written on the topic and it is destined for as wide a popularity and as great an educational effect as that of Hendrick Van Loon's History of Mankind, now a household and school familiar. Shanghai readers who absorb it will find the Opera, the Symphony Orchestra and Mr. Stok's musical concerts taking on a sudden and delightful new significance and as a gift to youngsters, wise parents cannot make a finer choice.

BALISAND, Joseph Hergesheider's new fiction triumph, which has been appearing serially in the Saturday Evening Post, is one of the newest arrivals. Others are BEGGAR'S BANQUET by G. St. John-Lee, author of Spilled Wine; TEMPERAMENTAL PEOPLE by Mary Roberts Rinehart; ROSE OF THE WORLD, by Kathleen Norris; and THE WAY OF THE BUFFALO by Charles Alden Seltzer.

Douglas Fairbanks wishes the world to know that he is not only an acrobat, actor and sportsman. He has written another book—a dissertation on the joys of being young; on enthusiasm and optimistic courage. "Youth is in possession of the magic secret of success," declares Fairbanks. "The spirit of enthusiasm is the special property of youth, and, possessed of it, you can put all other rules of success in the wastebasket and succeed." The title of the book is YOUTH POINTS THE WAY. It reminds one, with its peppy tone, of Fairbanks' previous effort at cheerful enthusiasm-mongering, Laugh and Live, and it is quite superior to the usual ebullience of this sort.

After more than fifteen years among the natives of India, living precisely in the native manner, J. H. Sauter, German traveller and scholar, has written a fascinating book which he entitles AMONG THE BRAHMINS AND THE PARIAHS. If one wants authentic description of the life, thought and daily habits of the average Indian, he will find it in the pages of this exceptionally vivid account.

The autumn list of Robert M. McBride Co., one of the rising publishing houses of New York, presents an unusual array of striking literary names: Maxim Gorky, James Branch Cabell, Bernhard Kellerman, Carl Van Doren, Charles J. Finger, Marie Dressler, Nicolas Lyesskov, Isabel Ostrander, Rita Wellman and others. Cabell has two books in the ring STRAWS AND PRAYER-BOOKS and FROM THE HIDDEN WAY, both Jurgens-esque echoes of the mythical life beyond life. Maxim Gorky also offers two titles in FRAGMENTS FROM MY DIARY and THE JUDGE, the latter a new play in four acts published for the first time. Marie Dressler contributes her autobiography under the title of THE LIFE STORY OF AN UGLY DUCKLING. There are two interesting books on the East—FINDING THE WORTHWHILE IN THE ORIENT, a new and very helpful tourist's description of the joys and perils of travel in this hemisphere by Lucian Swift Kirtland, and THE VALLEY OF EYES—UNSEEN, an adventurous romance of China and Tibet.

Marcel Proust is not known in Shanghai as a best seller, but he has suddenly become known to the entire world of booklovers through the publication of two exquisitely artistic books and through the event which is so often the release of fame—his death.

Forced by a slow, malignant disease whose shadow had haunted him from youth, Marcel Proust withdrew at the height of his popularity from the social world of the "old regime" aristocracy of the Faubourg Saint-Germain, of which he was the most brilliant and sought-after figure, and wrote in the finest French prose of modern time the history of that proud and fading nobility.

Clostered in his rooms from which he scarcely ever emerged, rooms padded for silence where he rose late in the afternoon to receive his friends, and where he wrote until long after dawn, he produced the monumental series of novels known in English as Remembrance of Things Past. He died in November, 1922, at 51, and his death was the signal for the most spontaneous and widespread tribute accorded any modern writer. In France, England, and America, all writers of importance, from the most modernistic to the most conservative united to do him honor. In France the name of Proust dominated all the reviews to the exclusion of almost everything else. In England, from Joseph Conrad and George Saintsbury down, the foremost writers wrote long essays in his praise. A book of these, MARCEL PROUST: AN ENGLISH TRIBUTE, has recently been published in America by Thomas Seltzer.

Four volumes of Proust's masterpiece are now in English—Swann's Way in two volumes, and Within a Budding Grove in two volumes, the latter having just been published by Thomas Seltzer. In France twelve volumes have now appeared, and four are to come.

Remembrance of Things Past might be the autobiography of Marcel Proust, but it is not strictly so. He has delved deep into his own life for his materials, but with the true artist's instinct he has used his memories as the material rather than the substance of his story. It would be impossible to put a finger on any incident in these books and say: "This is autobiographical; that is not." Proust's method of narration is so faithful to life that each section of his work can be taken as a unit, without reference to what comes before or after, just as one meets and parts with a person or a group in actual life.

Within a Budding Grove, two volumes of more than 770 pages, won the coveted Prix Goncourt in 1919. In this section he treated the youth of the hero, and is introduced Albertine, the chief feminine figure of the narrative as a whole, who is to appear in all subsequent volumes and who gives her name to the next to the last section of Remembrance of Things Past. While the work is not slavishly autobiographical, certain characters are thought to be recognizable, among them the painter Elstir who is generally identified with Claude Monet, although the author himself has never confirmed the suspicion. As a portrait of the social life of the fading nobility of Saint-Germain, however, the work is absolutely faithful, and it is remarkable that modern French writers, whose interest in that past era is no greater than the modern interest in the social details of mid-Victorianism, have written eloquently of the abiding charm with which Proust has suffused his record of an epoch otherwise passed.

Marcel Proust was born on July 10, 1871, the son of a professor of medicine at the University of Paris. He began to write early for periodicals, and his first published work, "Les Plaisirs et les Jours," appeared with a preface by Anatole France. The disease to which he eventually succumbed on November 18, 1922, appeared early, and by his thirtieth year he had withdrawn entirely from social life. This disability probably enhanced his introspective tendency and gave him leisure to develop his astonishing analytical ability and psychological insight, so that while he never interested himself in the theories of the modern psychologists and psychoanalysts, his fiction shows a grasp of subtle psychological principles of the same order as that the psychologists reached by scientific experiment and study.

Two interesting new books are announced by the Commercial Press of Shanghai, MODERN CHINESE HISTORY, SELECTED READINGS by Harley Farnsworth McNair, Professor of History and Government at St. John's University; and RECONSTRUCTION OF MODERN EDUCATIONAL ORGANISATIONS IN CHINA, by Chilling Yin, Professor of Education at Shanghai College of Commerce. Both books will be reviewed in an early issue of THE CHINA PRESS.

That President Coolidge does not advocate further meddlesome legislation on the part of the National Government is revealed in his book, THE PRICE OF FREEDOM, published by Scribners. Discouraging on The Limitations of the Law, he says, "There is danger of disappointment and disaster unless there be a wider comprehension of the limitations of the law. The attempt to regulate, control and prescribe all manner of conduct and social relations is very old. It was always the practice of primitive peoples. Such governments assumed jurisdiction over the action, property, life and even the religious convictions of their citizens down to the minutest detail. A large part of the history of free institutions is the history of people struggling to emancipate themselves from all of this bondage."

MY PAST AND THOUGHTS: The Memoirs of Alexander Herzen. The Authorized Translation. Translated from the Russian by Constance Garnett. 2 vols. Alfred A. Knopf.

The memoirs of Alexander Herzen belong in the first rank of published reminiscences. They have all the values which can properly be identified with a work of this kind, for they contain not only the personal record of a life of engrossing interest; they offer as well a commentary on the complexion of social and political life in Russia during the first half of the nineteenth century, which adds immensely to an understanding of that period and of the events that have followed it. They are rich in historical portraiture, they are tinged with a ripe philosophy, and they have an enduring literary vigor and charm.

The two volumes now ready bring his story down to 1847. They do not, therefore, include the period in which he accomplished his most effective work in the Russian revolutionary movement they do not relate his part, which was a considerable one, in that phase of the movement which resulted in the liberation of the serfs in 1861. That will fall within the scope of the remaining three volumes, which are to be issued in the Spring. From 1847 until his death, in 1870, Herzen did not set foot in Russia. He lived chiefly in London, and it was there that he established the first free Russian press and wielded an influence of great strength on political developments in his own country. The first two volumes describe the growth of liberal thought in Russia from the Decembrist uprising of 1825, in which he was too young to participate, down to 1847 picturing it against a background of the blackest official corruption and oppression. So watchful, so determined, so ruthless, was the power of Russian autocracy that it required all but a century to bring to complete fruition the seeds of revolution that were carried back to Russia after the Napoleonic wars by the young officers who organized the Decembrist rising. It is that protracted agony of struggle which has made the Bolshevik betrayal of Russian hopes so tragic and so ironic in its perversion of the vision which animated generations of the idealists of whom Herzen was one.

But the length of the struggle did not follow simply from the unrelaxed vigilance of the Government. Already, in Herzen's pages, there is discernible that fatal lack of coordinated effort on the part of Russian democrats which made the Bolshevik coup possible. You cannot, it is said, gather six Russians together in a room without hearing six differing opinions on any question discussed. No political body in the world ever contained so many divergent shades of political opinion as did the Russian Duma—not even the Sixty-eighth Congress of the United States.

Alexander Herzen was born in 1812. Like so many other Russian democrats, he was of aristocratic birth. His father, Ivan Yakovlev, a very wealthy nobleman, married a German girl in Stuttgart, and because the Lutheran ceremony was not supplemented in Russia, Alexander was not given the family name; he received the surname Herzen, believed to have been a contraction of the German word for darling.

Herzen's memories of his sheltered and luxurious youth go back to the story he so often demanded of his nurse, of how Napoleon came to Moscow, of the great fire of his father's conversation with the French Emperor, in which he blamed the Governor of Moscow for the fire and declared that it was vandalism; maintained that his war was against England and not against Russia, and that his peaceful dispositions were not made known to the Emperor Alexander.

With the first childish impressions there begin the long series of character portraits which are scattered profusely through the memoirs. Herzen seems to have included everybody whose life touched upon his; servants, relatives, friends, officials, Czar Nicholas of the "pewee eyes," fellow-unfortunates in Siberia—all are presented with the graphic fidelity of a Carlyle.

The Emperor Nicholas I. in whose reign all of Herzen's mature life in Russia was passed, was one of the strongest and most ruthless of the Czars. Herzen said he "always looked like a slightly bald Medusa with cropped hair and mustaches. In the street, at the court, with his children and Ministers, with his courtiers and maids of honor, he was incessantly trying whether his eyes had the power of a rattlesnake, of freezing the blood in the veins."

Herzen's gallery of portraits includes several of "those grotesquely original creatures who are only possible in Russia," eccentrics whom Herzen attributed to "the stifling emptiness and numbness of Russian life, strangely combined with the liveliness and even turbulence of the Russian character." One of these was the elder brother of his father, whose visits excited horror and anxiety in the household.

He was a man gifted by nature (says Herzen), yet he spent his whole life in absurd actions, often almost crimes. Neither diplomatic nor monastic surroundings could restrain his unbridled character. Deserted by all his relations and also by his acquaintances, he lived in solitude in his big house in the Tverskoy Boulevard, oppressing his housewife and ruining his peasants. He amassed a great library of books and collected a regular harem of serf-girls, both of which he kept under lock and key.

His lawsuit concerning an Amati violin lasted thirty years, and ended in his losing it. After another lawsuit he succeeded by extraordinary efforts in winning the wall between two houses, the possession of which was of no use to him whatever. Being himself on the retired list, he used, on reading in the newspapers of the promotion of his old colleagues, to buy such orders as had been given them, and lay them on his table as a mournful reminder of the decorations he might have received.

It is difficult not to receive the impression from Herzen's book, or indeed from any work in which there is an equally broad canvas of Russian life, of a people half of whom are saints and the other half scoundrels, or of a nation compounded equally of strong men and weaklings. Of course no such division exists or ever did, in Russia or anywhere else, but the illusion is created by the profusion of widely divergent emphases in Russian character.

In his memories of his father, Herzen drew an unsurpassed picture of one of those cultured but spoiled and capricious noblemen of old Russia, one of those men who were the product of a life in which there was little scope for real usefulness: men often of vigorous intelligence and high abilities, whose lives were wasted in futile drifting. In the early nineteenth century Russia had recently been opened to the influences of Western Europe; France provided the pattern of Russian culture.

But in Russia (says Herzen) men exposed to the influences of this mighty Western movement became original but not historical figures. Foreigners at home, foreigners in other lands, idle spectators spoilt for Russia by Western prejudices and for the West by Russian habits, they were a sort of intellectual superfluity and were lost in artificial life, in sensual pleasure and in unbearable egotism.

By education and position, Herzen's father belonged to this circle, though his character and health did not permit him to continue long in a frivolous life; he became a recluse instead. He wrote more correctly and naturally in French than in Russian, and he read no Russian books. He once picked up Karamzin's "History of the Russian Empire," because he had heard the Emperor Alexander was reading it, but he soon laid it down with contempt, exclaiming: "It is nothing but Izayaslatiches and Olgavitches, to whom can it be of interest?"

It is at Moscow University that the story of Herzen's career really begins. It was among Russian youth of both sexes that the revolutionary movement progressed, among the youth of the universities. At Moscow University young Herzen soon found himself the center of a group whose heroes were the Decembrists. It was the year after his graduation that his long history of troubles with the Government police began. Herzen's circle, which continued to meet, came under suspicion; arrest followed, then several months imprisonment, and finally exile. These boys had talked too freely—that was enough. Herzen was sent to Perm, a small town in one of the Eastern provinces, used for the same purposes as Siberia.

Outside of Russia the idea has commonly persisted that "exile to Siberia" always meant that the condemned man was put to work in the mines. But Russian officialdom made other use of many of its political prisoners. They, too, became a part of officialdom. Work in the mines was reserved principally for those convicted of crimes other than political. Men like Herzen were usually assigned clerical tasks in the provincial offices. Aside from their duties they were free to mingle in the social life, such as it was, of the towns in which they were confined. The prospect was dreary enough for men who were accustomed to the cultured circles of Moscow and Petersburg. So illogical were the workings of the system that sometimes political prisoners were given posts of responsibility. Herzen himself, in his second exile, was appointed Counselor in the Novgorod provincial Government; here was a recognized enemy of the monarchy, regularly signing the report of the police-master upon him as a man under police supervision, and at the same time passing upon cases of the abuse of power by land owners and catechizing people who were, like himself, under the supervision of the police.

Herzen's stay in Perm was brief; he was transferred to Vyatka, where he came under the direction of one of the most despotic of the provincial Governors. They were not all villains, but they were almost all corrupt. The Governor at Perm did not oppress the exiles; he confined himself to graft. But Tyutayev, who ruled at Vyatka like an Oriental satrap, was guilty of a thousand injustices and cruelties. In Herzen's pages the official circles of Russia, increasing in stagnation and corruption with their distance from the capital, are pictured with no detail spared of their absurdity, their inhumanity, their dreadful death in life. He says of Vyatka:

"The Government office was incomparably worse than prison. Not that the actual work was great, but the stifling atmosphere, as of the Cave of Dogs, of that scene of corruption, and the terrible stupid waste of time made the office insufferable. . . . There were some twenty clerks in the office. For the most part they were persons of no education and no moral conceptions; sons of clerks and secretaries accustomed from their cradle to regard the service as a source of profit, and the peasants as soil that yielded revenue, they sold their services, took twenty copecks and quarter rubles, cheated for a glass of wine."

But there are other sides to Herzen's memoirs, other pages than those on which the tragedy of Russia is imprinted. His exhortation of official stupidities and injustice is often lightened by humor, and there are whole chapters in his life which concern fairer aspects of human nature than those he encountered during the period of exile. Such is the story of his courtship, his tender memories of the girl who joined him when he was permitted to come nearer home, and the idyllic early days of their marriage. Such are the stories of his friendships, his recollections of serene periods of country life, the memories of childhood and early youth.

Friendship is a sentiment of the greatest strength among them, an exceptional purity of interest and a quality of unselfish devotion which is one of the most shining facets of the many-sided Russian character. Herzen was rich in friends, and he wrote down their part in his life with a warm sympathy which glows in his remembrance of them.

There was the poet Ogarev, who Herzen describes as one of those people of peculiar magnetism, drawing others to them for no apparent reason. "They warm, unite and soothe them, they are like an open table at which every one sits down, renews his strength, rests, grows calmer and more stouthearted, and goes away a friend." He recalls Ogarev, in their student days, sitting over a glass of wine and growing more and more gloomy, then "all at once, with tears in his eyes, repeating the words of Don Carlos (who quoted them from Julius Caesar): 'Twenty-three and nothing done for eternity!' This so mortified him that with all his might he brought his open hand down upon the green wine-glass and cut it

Back to College

WITH the coming of Fall, the college girl begins to shop for appropriate apparel with which to fill her trunks. The tailored line, remaining in vogue, lends opportunity for the selection of this charmingly youthful style. Two-piece suits, three-piece costumes and the always-favored one-piece frock are among the fashions this season. In lieu of the delayed Summer weather which necessitated relegating our colorful models to the rear of our wardrobes, the new season will show brilliant shades.

BUSY days of shopping are at hand. School trunks will be packed with all sorts of confections for the coming semester's social occasions. Yet, in yielding to the lure of finery which every girl loves, she should not overlook the simple costumes for everyday wear.

Today's large illustration shows a very attractive knitted frock which can be slipped on quickly when the morning gong sounds in the dormitory. Lustrous pure silk is knitted into a fabric and the frock cut from this material. A deep yoke and a deep border at the hem of the tunic blouse lend a charming touch of color.

Tailored lines are splendid for the youthful figure. A frock for general utility wear is made of blocked plaid with a row of round buttons at the front and used again up the sides of the sleeves. One wears a striped scarf to complete the costume. A small hat of leather has a perforated band, tied at one side.

An especially attractive traveling costume is made in two pieces, with frock and cape to match. Straight of line with motifs of embroidery placed at becoming spots, this frock is very girlish because of its simplicity. A long cape dips to the skirt at the back and lies across the shoulders. The cape does not reach around to the front, merely falling in a straight line over the sleeves.

For a day on the links an appropriate costume is the silk-knitted sweater and skirt illustrated today. A flat-knitted stitch in self-color forms the smart horizontal bandings, which afford the only decorative note. A silk scarf is wound about the throat and tied at one side.

City Of Paris Shows New Fall Models In Hats And Gowns

Felt And Velour In Small Close Shapes Dominate The Millinery Mode

BY IRENE CORBALLY KUHN

The old chestnut that starts out by stating that "in the spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love," never completed the roundelay by telling the world where the young woman's fancy turns to in spring, summer, fall and winter, first of all. It is, generally speaking, toward hats which, since feminine hair disappeared in bobs, shingles and other brief varieties of coiffure, has become woman's crowning glory.

The City of Paris, in its new quarters on Broadway just below the Astor House, has plenty of material for thought for the young women of Shanghai. The hats are small and maybe that is why there are so many of them, one more fetching than another, until the problem of choosing becomes as difficult as selecting a suitor from a galaxy of equally endowed applicants.

Miss Laura Holden, whose exquisite taste in the selection of hats, gowns, coats, wraps and accessories has by now become so well-known in Shanghai that the day a shipment of new models arrives in the City of Paris the little grey salons are crowded with eager feminine devotees of fashion before the goods are entirely unpacked.

The new hats which Miss Holden selected on her last trip home have just come in. They are, to use a mild term, ravishing. Bendel models predominate and everyone who knows the extreme chic and svelteness of line of a model from Henri Bendel, knows also what to expect in these latest hats to arrive in Shanghai.

Felt is the popular material. The shape of the moment is an adaptation of the cloche, although there are many models that would seem to indicate that the hat is growing up again and that the small-girl size chapeau that has been crammed down on feminine heads all over the world for a couple of seasons past now is going through the inevitable process of developing.

Most of the hats are self-trimmed or else garnished very simply with grosgrain ribbon. The self-trimming consists either of ends of the felt, cut and tied, or twisted in some provoking little quirk, or else cut-out felt applied as a banding over a piece of velvet of contrasting color.

White felt hats in the small cloche and tiny, up-turned brim hats are exceedingly popular. There is a tendency away from the beige tones but greys and browns are popular. Light shades—hydrangea blue and lemon—are charming. One particularly fetching model in the City of Paris is of lemon-colored felt, a not too deep mushroom shape, and trimmed with grosgrain ribbon, which binds the brim and is shirred in a deep half-circle on the crown in front. Another lovely little hat of tan felt in a turned-down shape has two narrow bands of felt, ribbon bound, twisted around its crown and crossed through a ribbon-bound slit in the brim on the right side. Still another, which was purchased by one of Shanghai's best-dressed young women to go with a brushed wool coat-sweater of tan with orange, black and lemon bands, was of deep orange, with the brim rolled inside to the crown, the only trimming being a wheel of shirred orange and black ribbon posed on the side of the crown.

Velours, soft and silky beavers, in correct sports models, and in browns and greys, are also among the latest arrivals in the City of Paris.

Miss Holden had some very pertinent points on the mode to impart to an eager group of listeners. "Striped flannels, in browns and other warm shades are being much worn," said the oracle. "The skirt length in Paris is sixteen inches from the floor; in America, it is ten or twelve. Soft dresses, are, of course, a little longer. Straight lines and the slim silhouette go on and on, forever, apparently," she continued. "Tunic dresses are it, and buttons are simply the last word for trimmings."

Some of the new materials, charmeuse a silkier, fine weave than Polart twill and luminette, a material exactly like silver cloth in texture but, in soft silk, and in black and dark colors, are used in the latest frocks in Miss Holden's establishment. A lovely dress of black luminette was made in semi-tailored fashion, with short sleeves, revers giving the bodice a coat-like look, and a gilet of hydrangea blue crepe de chin. The revers, sleeves, collar were piped with cloth of gold, and a double row of black and gold metal buttons accompanied the skirt on its graceful way from corsage to hem.

One of the most popular sections of the City of Paris is that devoted to sports clothes. Sports skirts of plaids, silk, accordion plaid, and flannel, are worn with the new, smart box coats of brushed wool.

The coat dress in dark, heavy crepe is proving most popular for late summer wear. This charming frock, developed in midnight blue crepe marocain has panels of accordion pleats which are stitched down from "v'd" pockets. The girdle, of brightly-colored ribbon, fastened with a novelty buckle, supplies the color note.

Seasonal Novelties In Ribbon And Enamel

A unique style of trimming is a round ornamental plaque, an exaggerated rosette. It is made usually of ribbon or ribbons of fancy fibers, of ostrich and ribbon combined, and the first examples of this rather striking novelty are of enormous size. This latest motif is designed particularly to trim the new felt and velvet hats, indicating very definitely that both crowns and brims will be more generous than they have been for two seasons.

In two kinds, both color and shade, of ribbon, of ostrich, of flowers and metal gauze artistically combined, these stunning bits are seen on some of the advance French models of evening gowns. They form the high light in a costume otherwise plain in color and self-trimmed—with tucks, ruffles and stitching. The popular colors for the coming season are shown in some of these motifs—new reds, blues, greens and yellows, and almost invariably, with a touch of silver.

The shaded ribbons and the two-toned come with cords and selvages of a bright contrast. The motifs of ostrich are in the lightest feathery form, fringing a large silk and velvet flower. They are adapted to evening gowns of tulle, and sheer, lustrous fabrics.

The eternally feminine vanity case continues to stimulate the imagination and the artistic genius of designers. Vanity cases are presented in novel variations, almost weekly—dainty, intriguing affairs that conceal a practical service under an ingenious cover. The latest showings in these cases illustrate the advantage of combining a vanity and cigarette case. There are smart little things of enamel, oblong, oval, round and square containers, suspended from a fine silk tassel which hangs from the bottom of the pendant case. They are shown in some exclusive specialty shops and in the best department stores, in crimson, jade, green, lapis blue and black. Most of them are traced and variously decorated with a delicate pattern in brilliants.

In the black enamel, imitating onyx, this combination is particularly stunning. As each of these little cases is opened the interior displays two compartments—one for cigarettes, the other for powder, with a little puff, and rouge, with a tiny dauber. Each side is covered with thin metal that opens and closes with a snap, keeping the little stores separate and accessible.

Along with the latest ideas in trinkets of this sort are other lovely things in black enamel: new miniature watches, for instance—open face, with smooth, plain back and often with a monogram in stones or embossed gold. They are of the finest workmanship and in beautiful colors, which harmonize easily with street or afternoon dress, very decorative, and are intended to be worn on a chain, ribbon or necklace like a locket.

Cigarette holders are also being made in this new enamel. The model is a little oblong case into which the holder of ivory, jade, gold, tortoise, or any of the new materials is slipped, to be carried in one's purse or attached to the bead necklace or chain and worn as a charm.

Pretty, ingenious, self-filling pens, quite short and compact, a convenient accessory that many women now carry, are shown in enamel of many colors. Red and jade seem to be quite the most popular. The pen is accompanied, by a separate case, also of enamel, which contains an extra number of the fillers that keep the pen's supply of ink replenished. These and still other little articles fashioned of this new, attractive enamel are now worn in such numbers as to keep the hands of the fashionably gowned woman both full and busy.

Tooled leather and wood are the materials of which some of the most chic toilet and costume accessories are designed. In one of the smartest shops on the Avenue are shown a variety of lovely things: powder boxes, vanity, cigarette, card and perfume cases of fine, highly polished leather tooled in delicate patterns with dull or bright gold. The number of charming things to which this treatment is adapted is interesting—traveling conveniences; fittings for the desk, dressing table, suit case, handbag, smoking or sewing table; frames, belts and so on through a long list of original inventions. There appears to be a preference this season for rose-colored leather, and the loveliest things yet shown are from the Italian ateliers, in rose and gold, and green and gold.

The quaint color design and effect of the "Spanish" shawls so flashily featured in the smart shops for several seasons now have their counterpart, a hand-painted facsimile. Shawls of a fine quality of crepe or silk are painted in the patterns of the original embroidered Spanish. They are not really Spanish at all, but Chinese, arriving in Spain by way of Manila. They are known by the women who make them a distinguishing part of their national dress as "Manton Manila."

Flat Handbags Harmonise With The Silhouette

Matching Colors Or Bright Hues Equally Popular

The ensemble idea is responsible for the close conformity which exists between handbag styles and the mode. The recurrence of the costume motif upon the purse is not the only manifestation of this tendency—it is equally important that the outline of the bag coincide with the silhouette of the coat or dress. Thus in the days of the bouffant silhouette the ample pouch bag was en vogue, while to-day and ever since the vogue of the straight, slender outline, the large, flat envelope bag with or without a handle has been the leading style.

There is no set color scheme for the handbag this season. It may match the rest of the outfit or it may vividly contrast with it. This easy interpretation enables the woman who is anxious to inject a striking color note into her costume but who is a little timorous about employing coat or frock hue and thus gratify her urge toward lively colorings. Red is, however, quite popular for the flat envelope purses.

Maquet, of Paris, has a full collection of new purses, card cases and handbags made of basket woven strips of metal and black moire ribbon forming alternating squares. The ribbons are about half an inch wide. The metal effects are in both antique gold and platinum. The bags are exquisitely designed and look more like jewelry than fabric. Another novelty purse by this designer is a white linen in a poplin weave fastening with a tongue buckle of colored enamel. A third is of white faille embroidered in pure Persian bird and flower designs in multi-colored silks.

DRESS

By Mary Marshall

Plaid Appear Everywhere, From Hat Trimmings to Sport Stockings

There is one type of plaid frock about which the French dress-makers seem to be particularly enthusiastic. It is perfectly straight and narrow—apparently without a curve or an extra inch of fullness from armholes to hem. The plaid runs perfectly straight even on the long straight sleeves. One attractive model is buttoned up down the front with twenty-one buttons and buttonholes. There is a rather wide collar of colored linen on the reverse of which is worn a single artificial rose. A very low waistline is marked not by a belt or any shaping but by pockets at either side made from triangles of the plaid sewed in place.

The sketch shows another simple plaid frock—in Scotch coloring of blue, green and a line of yellow. It is trimmed with soft black leather and white braid. The belt which is of leather is arranged loose enough so as not to draw in the material at the waistline at all.

Most striking among plaid accessories are plaid stockings which seem to find some admirers. Needless to say they are appropriate only for active sports wear. Plaid scarfs—some of them following authentic Scotch tartans—are sold for both men and women. One of these with a goodly bit of red in it is well chosen to go with a rain

Moslem countries, you know, it is worn only by the men—and it consists of an enormous scarf wrapped around the tarboosh or fez. Great pains are taken to see that it is twisted just so many times and wound about in a definite manner according to the rank and descent of the wearer, and great would be the sacrifice if a mere woman were one among the followers of Mohammed. Interestingly enough the word that means turban in Turkish, becoming turban in Old-French, gave rise to our own turban and tulip—so named because of its close resemblance to this venerable Eastern head covering.

Every once in a while women revive the fashion for turbans. They do so usually as a result of direct contact with some Oriental country where the turban is worn. Turbans became fashionable with the first part of the nineteenth century when Napoleonic wars brought France into contact with the East. But this was not the first time that turbans had been worn by women. Three hundred and fifty years ago in France the Turkish turban was adopted—as a result of Eastern intercourse. At a royal wedding in France at that time a turban was worn with a bridal veil hanging down to the ground. Even earlier than this turbans were worn in England and France as a result of the Crusades.

The turbans of the present time in France are undoubtedly the outcome of renewed interest in the French colonial possessions in the East. Princess from Indo China visiting Paris give opportunity to the designers to develop the turban idea in new and interesting guise—a little different from any turban that European women have worn before. The sketch shows a distinctive peaked turban of three shades of purple velvet and ribbon that was worn at one of the races in France this summer.

Motion picture actresses seem to have a penchant for turbans—especially the closely draped rather small models. One recently worn by one of the cinema stars was closely draped of metal cloth with long white coque feathers at either side drooping to the shoulders. Pola Negri seems to be especially partial to this type of headgear—and any observant movie fan of your acquaintance could probably mention a dozen others.

Smart Or Elegant?

French fashion magazines refer quite frequently to "les dames elegantes." If we translated this literally and spoke about elegant ladies, most of our readers would be amused if not disgusted.

Frankly, nobody wants to be an elegant lady nowadays. Yet as a matter of fact it is really difficult to find in a word or expression just what the French mean by "dames elegantes." For most of us the word style is impossible. We don't call the well-dressed women we know stylish, though we may call them fashionable. And we don't call them swell, and most of us do not use the French word

"chic." Distinguished hardly takes the place of the other French word "distinguee."

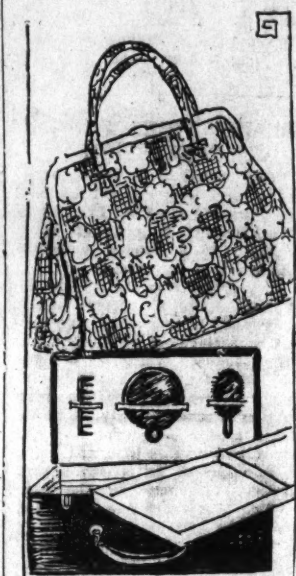

For this reason most of us over-work the word "smart." We over-work it so much in fact that the time may soon come when it will seem as blatant as elegant or swell.

FASHION FLASHES

Bright red bids fair to be a chosen color for accessories this autumn. Among the new things from Paris is a crowned Directoire red felt hat with a prim little ostrich feather—closely curled—sticking up at the right side and with it a small round muff of red feather flecked with yellow.

Carpet Bags Have Come Back in Favor for Overnight Visits

Someone ought to write the story of the evolution of the present-day overnight bag. Why doesn't some young student of anthropology choose this subject for his doctor of philosophy thesis? Certainly it would be original and diverting, and surely as edifying as many that university students choose nowadays. The cave woman just made sure that there were fig trees growing where the house party was going to take place, and let it go at that. The Queen of Sheba saw to it that some dozen or so of her camels were laden with additional raiment from her wardrobe, and then felt free to stay as long as Solomon urged her. And what an array of bags and boxes, chests and packages would there be in the collection!

Overnight bag of tapestry and miniature suitcase of brown leather lined with yellow and fitted with small tortois shell brush, comb and mirror.

Until quite recently it did seem as if the last word in overnight contraptions was the box shaped like a miniature suitcase, silk lined and fitted with necessary toilet articles. But the carpet bag has been revived, and the woman who keeps up to the latest fads in all her accessories carries one whenever she makes an overnight visit. Yes, it really is a revival of the old-time carpet bag that seemed so hopelessly out of fashion. Only it is not made of ordinary carpet, but of hand-made tapestry of the sort that the French call grand or petit point.

To do embroidery is, you know, quite the fashion again. But the really up-to-date woman does not embroider her own underthings or work on white table linen. Instead she works in all sorts of rich and gorgeous colors on canvas stretched on a frame, following a most intricate pattern in tapestry or needle point. This had doubtless come from England, where many members of the royal family aristocracy have been encouraging a revived interest in really expert and artistic embroidery, seeking to go back to the exquisite work of the Middle Ages for their patterns. Seats and backs of chairs, tops for divans, panels for fire screens, and table covers are among the subjects chosen. Now you may show your ingenuity by embroidering the sides for your own tapestry overnight bag. Only you must call it your "carpet bag."

tainly is not more characteristically American than cranberry pie.

So far as apple pie goes, you yourself doubtless agree that it is the most characteristically American and most generally liked of our pies. But among city folk at least pumpkin pie does not seem to be a close second, and cranberry pie would seldom pole a vote as a favorite sort of pie. In country regions or among people who eat very generally at home then the pumpkin pie might be a second choice, for home-made pumpkin pies from fresh pumpkins are certainly delectable. The city restaurant version is but a sorry imitation. The pumpkin pie, more than any other, seems to need the hand of the home-trained family cook.

Interestingly enough lemon meringue pie has many admirers. It was first favorite as often as apple pie in a recent canvass of food preferences. Chocolate meringue and custard pie likewise had many admirers—many more than the far famed American cranberry pie.

Most Americans seem to prefer the two-crust pie, save in the case of a meringue pie or a custard pie, where the second crust would be out of the question. Moreover, they seem to prefer a deep pie and a pie with plenty of filling. An American recently returned from London told with much concern of the difficulties he had had in getting a good piece of pie while gone. He found one place where he was told he could get real American cherry pie. "It was a little tart," he said with disgust, "and it had only about five cherries in it, and they had the pits in!" That to our American taste seems like the height of bad form in pie making.

Summer is the time of flirtation. Perhaps in your vacation peripatasy in the woods, or at the seashore you were not averse to a little flirtation, even though you were married.

Perhaps you see no particular harm in it.

But what you may consider as a harmless bit of fun, or idle flirtation may not be considered in that light by those to whom you bear sacred allegiance.

And then the gossips will talk. It takes just a ripple to swell into a wave of scandal, and waves never roll singly.

It takes very little to create a condition where you will be under suspicion with those who hold first claim on you and whose happiness you hold dear.

It is a serious matter to destroy the confidence of your life-partner and the slightest semblance of unfaithfulness sows the first seed which may end in real disaster.

Real Coney Islanders Shy At Chairs

Not Interested In Riding Slower Than They Can Walk

There are wheel chairs at Coney Island. The innovation has not created much of a stir in Catharine Street, however, and it isn't a topic of spirited conversation on Eldridge Street doorsteps. Wheel chairs never have had a festive significance in these neighborhoods.

It seems at times that most of the world doesn't appreciate the meaning of Coney Island to children of the localities where the fire escapes are the Summer resorts. A woman with four or five children and five or six rooms to look after cannot go in very heavily for pleasant journeys. There is, however, at least one day when she must drop the lid of the washtub and take her family to where the carousels are calling. The date for the junket isn't fixed impulsively. It is set two or three weeks in advance. The intervening days pass as slowly as do the last few before Christmas. At last comes the wonderful morning.

If sand gets into the sandwiches and the entire lunch is flavored with the plums and bananas the children never murmur. They are at Coney. They chase the receding waves and are chased back by advancing ones. They sit at a table and drink sarsaparilla with ice in it. They see moving pictures filled with fights and rescues, and not the kind where people live in big houses with butlers and look at each other through eyeglasses on a stick.

They become pale and breathless on roller coasters, they watch the man pull the peppermint taffy and snip it into kisses, and they eat this candy while it's still warm and soft—and that's about all there is necessary to complete a perfect day.

The return home does not conclude these junkets. They are revived for days, as long as the box with the wire handle in which the candy came is still around the house.

It doesn't require any particularly keen perception to deduce that Coney Island served an admirable purpose without the gentle assistance and elevating influence of wheel chairs. The Boardwalk, too, which shades the beach would never be missed. Walking along the Boardwalk was not what the children from the four-dollars-a-room flats had been looking forward to. With Coney Island sporting the Boardwalk, one couldn't be quite sure what ails it would put on next.

What if the hot dogs were banished and booths for truffles were erected in their stead? What if the museum housing the jolly fat lady, the squeaky midget and Amok the Headhunter were to be torn down and a public library, containing non-fiction only, perhaps, were reared on its site? The young visitors didn't want anyilly painting done on their account.

When Coney Island first saw the wheel chairs it snickered audibly. Coney has never made any pretense at good manners. If the Island has any snickering or even guffawing to do, it does not throttle the impulse. The "Git a horse" of the early automobile days suggested "Git a nurse," and that was shrilly shouted here and there.

A wild beast, pushed along the Boardwalk, couldn't have excited more attention than did the first of the wheel chairs. There was considerable experimental riding, at the start, to see what it was like to move majestically in a perambulator for adults.

Majestic moving in a wheel chair, however, takes constant practice. Most of the pioneer passengers wore large sheepish grins as they rolled along. The wheel chair tyro at Coney hasn't much leisure in which to con the passing throng. He is too busy trying not to appear self-conscious.

People who regard Coney Island as quaint are the chief patrons of the wheel chairs, according to Jack McLean, who pushes one of them. They appreciate a nice refined ride with the ocean on one side and places to get cool drinks on the other," he says. "I shouldn't be surprised if the wheel chairs would bring more of the hightoned people down here."

"But the regular Coney Islanders want more speed. They insist on having their merry-go-rounds spin around like whirlpools, and their music fast and loud. They don't care to ride slower than they can walk. If they take the children along, the kids want to get out and help me push."

Moreover, it costs 75 cents an hour for two persons in the wheel chairs. Seventy-five cents buys seven not dogs of the swell stands, and one of the five-cent ones on the Bowerly. It pays for seven round trips from home to the Island and three lollipops to keep the kids quiet.

Pushing wheel chairs at resorts where they are used to them is much easier than doing this work at Coney, where the wheel chair is a regular feature, people give it the right of way. At the Island they like to assert their independence, or defy the rich, or something, because they move out of our way when they get good and ready. We can blow our heads off with our whistles and they won't even give us a glance.

"Making speed on Saturdays and Sundays is as hard as swimming against rapids. We try to cover twenty-five miles a day, but it's an uphill fight to do it on week-ends. Most of the people only ride for an hour. To go the full length of the Boardwalk, from the Dreamland automobile parking place to Seagate and return, requires an hour and a half or two hours. The round trip is about five miles, and most passengers stop to buy things at the stands which line the land side of the Boardwalk."

"Most of the riding is done at night, although business is good all day on Sundays and holidays. On the Fourth of July there were 300 chairs in motion. This may seem like a lot, but since there were a couple of hundred thousand people on the beach, you wouldn't call Coney Islanders exactly wild to ride in the chairs. They young couples don't use them much, because riding in them is about as private as being in a show window."

McLean recalled taking only one customer on an extended trip. That was a gentleman who had either been celebrating joy or drowning sorrow. The motion of the chair soothed and lulled him for five hours. He awoke sobered and hoped that none of his friends had seen him. They would have seen him. They would have seen that a wheel chair was a funny place for an ironworker to spend his time.

Woman With Gun Cows Armed Men

Visalia, Aug. 31.—Mrs. C. F. Smith, wife of a rancher near here, stepped out of the pages of a wild west thriller yesterday, figuratively speaking, and held two men at the point of a revolver on her husband's farm until Deputy Sheriff came for them.

The men A. T. Schintz and Christ Gonzales of Los Angeles, were wanted for the theft of an ax, a saw, and two wrenches. She saw them near her home, and taking her revolver set out after them.

Mrs. Smith caught up to Schintz and Gonzales in a field. One of them carried a shotgun. Pointing it at her, he threatened to shoot if she didn't drop her weapon, but she shook her head and stood frowning at them over the barrel of the revolver.

The man weakened first and the buttend of the shotgun fell slowly to the ground. She was still holding them when the deputies appeared from the Sheriff's office.

New Books Worth While

badly." It sounds priggish, but it can be better understood when one remembers the passionate idealism that was working in those young minds, and their ardent revolt against the futility that hemmed them in on every side.

There are unforgettable pictures of Byelinsky, the greatest of Russian critics, the man whose monthly articles were awaited with feverish expectation in St. Petersburg and Moscow.

Half a dozen times the students would call in at the coffee-houses to ask whether the notes of the Fatherland had been received; the heavy volume was snatched from hand to hand. "Is there an article of Byelinsky's?" "Yes," and it was devoured with feverish interest, with laughter, with argument, and three or four cherished convictions and reputations were no more.

Byelinsky was so shy that once he ran through the streets to escape meeting a lady to whose house a friend was bringing him for the first time.

But in that shy man, that frail body, there dwelt a mighty spirit. If he met with no objection, if he was not stirred to irritation, he did not speak well, but when he felt stung, when his cherished convictions were touched upon, when the muscles of his cheeks began to quiver and his voice broke, then he was worth seeing; he pounced upon his opponent like a panther, he tore him to pieces, made him ridiculous.

The discussion would often end in blood which flowed from the sick man's throat; pale, gasping, with his eyes fixed on the man with whom he was speaking, he would lift his handkerchief to his mouth with shaking hand and stop, deeply mortified, crushed by his physical weakness. How I loved and how I pitied him at those moments!

If anything mars the quality of Herzen's memoirs, it is the extraordinary profusion of his recollections, leading sometimes to diffuseness. His book is a Sargasso Sea in which all the driftwood of daily living is caught up. But therein lies some of its strength also. The memoirs are sometimes inconclusive, they were written at intervals and published in fragments.—New York Times.

Dog's Mute Plea Wins Life And A Home With Chief

New York, Sept. 1.—Jim, a brown collie, with a white tuft about his neck and a white top to his bushy tail, looked up into the face of Chief Joseph Johnson of the Madison, N. J., police recently.

Chief Johnson regarded the dog thoughtfully and then turned his glance to the grim, blue steel weapon in his hand and said to the dog, "No!" And then to the sergeant who stood by rubbing his chin "No!"

So, instead of meeting death, Jim found a home and a kindly faced master who has watched over the community for many years, and it all happened like this:

A motorist passing through Madison yesterday reported to the police headquarters that a "mad dog" had rushed at his automobile, and the dog looked like a collie. Patrolman Dawling and Farrell were sent out. They returned with no dog. A second motorist reported that a big, brown collie, seemingly mad, had dashed at his car. Then Chief Johnson, with the two patrolmen, set out to capture the beast. They found Jim near the estate of John Jones, at Convent, barking and chasing the passing machines and having the time of his dog life.

When called the collie raced up to the chief, wagging his tail as though he had been looking for him a long, long time. But when the chief drew his revolver Jim sat down on his tail and with his head at an angle looked worried, amazed and perplexed.

"Sergeant," said the chief, "this dog I want. I want it, let us return to the station house."

"Yes," replied the sergeant, and back they went, Jim standing in the back of the sifter with his nose to the wind.
